PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 98th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, February 2, 1984

The House met at 11 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O God, we stand before You this day in the spirit of prayer, thanking You for our blessings and seeking Your guidance.

May our words of prayer and thanksgiving be not idle words spoken only for our justification or our approval—prayers heard only by ourselves—but rather earnest and honest supplications for people who live in fear, or who are lonely, or anxious, or who know not the gift of freedom or for those seeking direction and purpose for life. As Your word reminds, may we not practice piety before others only to be seen by them, but rather let us be open to Your presence that our words of supplication and thanksgiving be given in a spirit of reverence and blessed by Your grace. In Your name, we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

PRESIDENT'S BUDGET REFLECTS MISUNDERSTANDING OF NATIONAL NEEDS

(Mr. BOUCHER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Speaker, the President's budget reflects a misunderstanding of our national needs.

At a time when we should invest in our economic future, he asks us to retreat on the most promising fronts.

We must invest in the effort to achieve energy independence, but the President proposes a 24-percent cut in research and development for new coal technologies.

We must invest in rebuilding the economy in areas of high unemployment, but the President proposes no funding for the Appalachian Regional Commission, our most effective industrial development agency.

At a time when greater fairness is called for, the President proposes abolishing legal services for the poor, and with all of these cuts the President still endorses a 1-year deficit of $180 billion.

We cannot purchase our way to prosperity, but with the resources available to us we must bolster those programs which will make our economy stronger and which promote greater fairness for all of our citizens.

THE LOSERS IN THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, as the President's budget continues to sink in, let us look again at who the big losers are.

The biggest losers are the American people continuing to pay for the $100 billion deficits for years to come.

The big losers and every one of us, who because there will be no tax reform this year, will continue to pay into this inequitable tax system, while the corporations and the rich continue to go scot-free and not hardly pay any taxes.

Who else loses, Mr. Speaker? If you are poor, forget it, because there will be no more Legal Services Corporation to defend you.

If you are a city, a State, or a county, and you are interested in some economic development funds, forget it, because the EDA is going to be abolished.

If you want to go to a national park or a forest, it is now going to cost you more to go. The average person and his family will pay for this deficit.

Mr. Speaker, the Grace Commission, the President's own Commission on finding and rooting out waste, where in the budget are ways to implement the Grace recommendations. Nowhere. Mr. Stockman has said there is no more waste.

Mr. Speaker, the issues in 1984 are going to be clear. They are the issues of fairness, and I think, Mr. Speaker, the President has failed in this regard.

LEGISLATION TO PROVIDE AID TO SCHOOLS AND CITIES

(Mr. ORTIZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill that will provide additional revenue not only to the people of this Nation, but to local governing units in a portion of the 27th District in Texas. By removing an impediment to oil and gas leasing at the naval air station in Corpus Christi, Tex., Congress can provide much needed revenue to the local units of government in Nueces County, and, at the same time, reaffirm its commitment to expanding our country's domestic energy supplies.

In 1981, the Interior Department lifted an existing ban on oil and gas leasing on military lands. The Mineral Lands Leasing Act provides that one-half of the royalty revenues derived from such leases be paid to the U.S. Treasury with the remaining half to go to the State.

This past year, the Texas State Legislature decreed that the State's portion will be distributed to those subdivisions impacted by such leasing; 50 percent of the revenues will go to the school districts in the county, 35 percent will be kept by the county, and 15 percent will be disbursed to the cities involved.

As a lease was being processed, it was learned that the naval air station had been incorporated in the city of Corpus Christi, and unfortunately, there also exists a regulation prohibiting leases being issued for drilling on military lands incorporated into cities.

Time is no longer a luxury in expediting this matter. Due to the geological formation of the naval air station land, drilling on surrounding private lands will drain the oil under this base. When that happens, a potential source of revenue to this Nation, to the local school districts, to the county and to the city will be forever lost.

Mr. Speaker, in this period of fiscal restraint, we can ill afford losing this revenue to private interests. Our Nation's schools are in dire need of aid. This bill will provide additional income for improvements to curriculum, facilities and personnel to schools in this county. Our Nation's cities have been told they must be less dependent on the Federal Government for financial support. This bill will enable Corpus Christi to provide better services to its citizenry at no cost to the Federal Government.

Surely, this body will not allow such a technicality as I mentioned to frustrate the general welfare of the people. I urge my colleagues to consider these facts and to support this legislation.

LEGISLATION TO SUSPEND JOINT MILITARY MANEUVERS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND HONDURAS

(Mr. STUDDS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing, along with 50 other Members of the House, a bill to suspend joint military maneuvers between the United States and Honduras and place a limit of 200 on the number of U.S. military personnel in that country.

This bill is prompted by a conviction that the Reagan administration is leading the United States toward direct involvement in a Central American war. Large scale military activities in Honduras are described as maneuvers, but they have become, in reality, a semipermanent deployment of U.S. combat troops. This deployment, when combined with U.S. support for Nicaraguan counterrevolutionaries, and large training programs for Honduran and Salvadoran troops, has had a profound and harmful impact upon the political life of Honduras. It impedes, as well, progress toward the kind of political settlement in Central America which ought to be the foremost objective of our policy in that region.

Our legislation will not put an end to U.S. military aid to Honduras—assistance, which in reasonable quantities, I fully support—but it would reduce the massive military presence which in recent days, has made Honduras look more like midsixties Vietnam than a struggling and desperately poor democracy which requires insulation from—rather than direct involvement in—the problems of its neighbors.

TIME TO REVIEW THE PRESIDENT'S POLICY IN LEBANON

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, Larry Speakes, the man in the White House who speaks for the President, stated in a published report this morning that Democrats are playing politics on Lebanon and that Democrats are aiding and abetting the Syrians in their policy of conquest in the Middle East.

I would remind the President that some of us in this body, indeed I, voted for the President's resolution on Lebanon for two specific reasons: One, that the Speaker of the House admonished us Democrats that we should not make a partisan issue out of Lebanon, and second, the Speaker would review the President's policy in Lebanon on a weekly basis.

I have been a member of that committee and I have reviewed the President's policy. I now question the wisdom of the President's policy on Lebanon. I question the judgment of the President's policy on Lebanon. It is time to review that policy, to debate that issue for the American people and to promote a change in the direction of the United States in the Middle East.

But, Mr. Speaker, I vigorously object to the implications of Mr. Speakes' comments that those of us who question the President's policies are partisan and even aiding the enemies of our Nation. All of us want to do what is best for this country. All of us want to see that this country's interests abroad are protected. All of us want to see that our country continues to be a beacon of freedom in every part of the world.

However, this is a democracy where we believe that the best public policy is one which is determined by free and open debate. During the 1950's our country was engulfed in a dark and frightening period known as the McCarthy era. Let me suggest to Mr. Speakes that Members of Congress are open to hearing the arguments of the White House in support of its policy in Lebanon. However, no one—particularly the Americans in Lebanon—is well served by his extending the shadows of the 1950's to our present-day discussion.

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET

(Mr. WEAVER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEAVER. Madam Speaker, President Reagan is attempting to hoodwink the American people by including in his budget social security funding, which is a self-funded program. If we take the actual Federal budget paid for out of general fund revenues, we find that instead of the military being 25 percent, it is almost 60 percent of the Federal budget.

This is a chart and it is very simple. The second item, by the way, is not social spending either. It is interest on the national debt, $110 billion, or $115 billion. Way down here is social spending.

And I put in unemployment compensation. If you cut it all out, all food stamps, medicaid, unemployment compensation, you would cut President Reagan's enormous deficit by one-third.

Here is education and health research down here. It is a very small amount and shows what the President thinks of education.

FAMILY VIOLENCE PREVENTION AND SERVICES AMENDMENT

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Madam Speaker, when the House considers the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983, the Miller-Mikulski family violence prevention and services amendment will be offered. We can no longer sit idly by and ignore the necessity for domestic violence shelter services. Federal assistance which provides funds for shelters has been drastically reduced or totally eliminated. The demand is so high for these services that shelters turn away 10 victims for every 1 person they can help. The Miller-Mikulski amendment would provide limited assistance and community services to victims of family violence.

I am appalled that there are no specific Federal programs for victims of spouse abuse. Over 6 million wives are abused by husbands, and approximately 4,000 women are beaten to death annually. In my own section of Florida, the Women in Distress Shelter is the only shelter in Broward County with a population of 1.3 million, and it is woefully inadequate to cope with the numbers although it does a great job with those it can save.

This problem affects all ages, races, income levels, and communities. I hope my colleagues will join with me in supporting the Miller-Mikulski amendment and the Waxman amendment to H.R. 1904.

DEFICITS

(Mr. ROEMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROEMER. Madam Speaker, I want to make a few things perfectly clear today.

I oppose deficits. I also oppose those who cause deficits. I oppose those who support deficits. I oppose those who spend too much. I oppose those who tax too little. I oppose those who are friends of those who support deficits.

I realized I had to make these things perfectly clear when I went home last night and my wife asked me if we in the Democratic Party were still soft on deficits.

Now, it is not true. We Democrats will talk this budget balanced any day now, just like the Republicans.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S BUDGET

(Mr. WEISS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEISS. Madam Speaker, with the introduction of his fiscal year 1985 budget, replete with astronomical deficits stretching into the foreseeable future, in spite of the most incredibly optimistic economic projections, President Reagan has abdicated his responsibilities as an economic leader. To ignore the reality of the deficit is to ignore the economic future of our Nation. It is a cynical and politically expedient choice that invites economic distress on a scale far greater than the recent recession.

The President's budget director claims that all stones have been turned over in the effort to cut the deficit. Perhaps he means to suggest that the tax giveaways of 1981 and the swollen military budget amount to immovable boulders or mountains of debt. Yet we can and must move these mountains if we are to solve the deficit crisis and safeguard the future of our Nation.

By clinging to an inequitable tax policy and an unjustifiably large military budget as sacred cows, President Reagan charts a course for social and economic disaster. Under the Reagan plan, America is not back, it is backing down. The Reagan administration, too, is backing down from its responsibility as steward of the Nation's economy. It is backing down from its responsibility to the poor. And it is backing down from its obligations to the American people.

REPRESENTATIVE PETRI INTRODUCES LEGISLATION FOR PRINCIPAL TRAINING PROGRAM

(Mr. PETRI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PETRI. Madam Speaker, America's future depends on the education we provide for our youth. Yet, our incredible budget deficits require us to be as careful as possible with the taxpayers' money. Accordingly, I am pleased to report that I have developed a proposal which will significantly improve education in America, yet cost surprisingly little.

Studies have shown that the most cost-effective way to improve the quality of a school is to be sure that the school principal is properly trained for his or her job. The most important variable which could account for the differences in student performance at different schools is the quality of leadership provided by the principal.

This is why I plan to introduce legislation for a principal training program. This legislation would establish regional centers tied to both the school of education and the school of business at a given university. After a startup grant, Federal aid for the program would end, and the sponsoring university would assume responsibility for the program.

The opportunity for cost-effective educational progress through the training of principals is too great to be ignored. I recommend this proposal for your attention, and I invite all my colleagues to cosponsor it.

PUNXSUTAWNEY PHIL PREDICTS 6 MORE WEEKS OF WINTER

(Mr. CLINGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Speaker, it gives me the greatest pleasure to once again announce to my colleagues that the most famous groundhog in the world, and I am speaking of none other than Punxsutawney Phil of Punxsutawney, Pa., has emerged from his underground home for the 98th consecutive year to make his annual forecast. Now it has come to my attention that there are pretenders to the throne. Groundhogs from other States are being touted as famous furry forecasters. Pay no attention to them. They are all impostors. Our Phil has been doing this for almost a century. And just like in government, it is experience that really counts. This being the appointed day for the greatest of all pronouncements of a meteorological sort issued from Punxsutawney, Pa., a community I am proud to represent in Congress, I have the high and distinct honor of reporting to Congress on the prediction of Punxsutawney Phil, the only reliable weather forecasting groundhog, as relayed to me this morning by the president of the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club. And I might add that following this morning's event, Phil was united in marriage to a young bride, courtesy of the Philadelphia Zoo. Congratulations Phil. And now the proclamation:

Here ye, here ye. To all faithful followers assembled here on Gobblers Knob, and to all believers around the world, I, James H. Means, president of the Punxsutawney Groundhog Club, hereby proclaim that His Imperial Majesty, King Philip, has emerged from his Royal burrow at 7:20 a.m. In the dimness of the early winter dawn, he stood for a moment, tall and proud, then in seconds he saw a thin grey shadow over his right shoulder. In this prophetic year of 1984, Punxsutawney Phil has indeed seen a shadow that indicates 6 more weeks of mild winter weather are still ahead of us. Just as President Reagan promised in his state of the Union address, Phil wants all his loyal followers to know that better days are coming. We have weathered the worst. Having made his infallible prediction, His Majesty has quickly scurried back into the warmth and safety of his burrow. This is the official word today, February 2, from Punxsutawney, Pennsylvania, the weather capital of the world, where the only reliable weather forecasting groundhog wants to remind us that big Phil is watching you in 1984.

VOLUNTARY SCHOOL PRAYER CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WALKER. Madam Speaker, I must say a couple of words on behalf of Octoraro Orphie, the other prognosticating groundhog. Octoraro Orphie has had problems getting that information with regard to predictions to Congress because we had to fortify his position to protect against terrorists this year. But he has always been more accurate than Punxsutawney Phil, I have to inform the House.

On a more serious subject, Madam Speaker, at this time I would hope to offer a unanimous-consent request calling for consideration of an amendment to permit voluntary school prayer. The Chair has ruled in order to make this request that I must have the clearance of the majority and minority leadership.

This request has been cleared by the minority leadership. I would now yield to a spokesman from the majority leadership for the appropriate clearance.

Madam Speaker, I hear no response. That should make it clear to the American people who stands in the way of voluntary school prayer: the Democratic leadership of this House.

WILL WE PERMIT A LINE-ITEM VETO

(Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Madam Speaker, at this time I would like to offer a unanimous request for consideration of an amendment to permit a line-item veto. This idea has been supported by Members of both parties as one way to help cut the deficit which worries us all. The Chair has ruled that in order to make this request I must have the clearance of the majority and minority leaderships.

Madam Speaker, the request has been cleared by the minority leadership. I would now yield for a spokesman from the majority leadership for an appropriate clearance.

Madam Speaker, there is silence; that should make it clear to the American people who stands in the way of deficit reduction and the line-item veto: the Democratic leadership.

EXTENDING EXPIRATION DATE FOR MORTGAGE REVENUE BOND PROGRAM

(Mrs. JOHNSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. JOHNSON. Madam Speaker, in the rush to adjourn last year this Congress let the December 31 expiration date for the mortgage revenue bond program lapse, casting uncertainty and gloom upon the homebuilding industry and the home-buying public. The dream of homeownership of thousands of low- and middle-income families has been put on hold, bottled up in a controversial tax bill and held hostage to a dispute over other tax changes.

Today I am introducing legislation to repeal the December 31 sunset tax date on MRB's.

Our Connecticut housing financing authority last year made possible almost 5,000 low-interest mortgages to Connecticut families through the MRB program. These mortgages totaled over $238 million, a tremendous boost to Connecticut's economy. Since this program has been in effect, CHFA has made homeownership possible for more than 31,000 Connecticut residents, families, $2 billion in mortgages, and it has provided a similar stimulus to the economy and opportunity for families throughout this Nation.

I urge the Committee on Ways and Means to proceed promptly on an extension of this important program.

THE SPEAKER NOW WANTS TO BRING OUR TROOPS HOME—I CAN'T BELIEVE IT

(Mr. HARTNETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. HARNETT. I thank Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, a couple of months ago I overheard the Speaker of the House of Representatives addressing his colleagues in the Democratic caucus assembled here on the floor of this House and he said something like this, Madam Speaker, he said, "It has been said that I am the most partisan politician in America. It has been said that I am probably the most political person in America. And I am proud of it. I am proud to be called the most political person and the most partisan person in America. But you just can't play politics with our troops in Lebanon; you just have to support our President and the troops in Lebanon. You have to do it. It is the American way."

Madam Speaker, nothing has changed in Lebanon except perhaps our position has gotten a little bit better. We have let a terrorist act, we have let a terrorist act change the great nonpartisan and nonpolitical nature of the Speaker of this House of Representatives who worked out a compromise to leave our troops there and now wants to renege on his commitment to the President and bring our troops home. I cannot believe it.

DEFICIT SPENDING HONOR ROLL

(Mr. MACK asked and was give permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MACK. Madam Speaker, yesterday and today we continued to hear the discussion and the concern about the size of deficits and whose fault it is. Well, frankly, a lot of the discussion on the Democratic side of the aisle caught us a little bit off guard and many of us really could not believe what we were hearing. So we reviewed 18 amendments to both the appropriations and authorization bills voted on during the 1st session of the 98th Congress and placed some of these names in the RECORD to put things straight about who voted how on what particular spending bills.

Afterwards, some Members came up to us and said that their names were not included in that particular list and asked us why. Unfortunately, we just did not have the time yesterday to list them. So I am taking the time to add names to what we are calling the deficit spending honor roll. The following individual, Mr. BOUCHER of Virginia, even though he indicated concern about the deficit, voted 16 of 18 amendments which added $21.11 billion to deficit spending.

IS OUR NATIONAL SECURITY WORTH 3.87 PERCENT?

(Mr. KINDNESS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINDNESS. I thank Madam Speaker.

Madam Speaker, I am hearing a lot of critcism of the President's budget for fiscal year 1985 and I cannot quite understand some of the twisted rhetoric. Perhaps some of our colleagues can help me to understand what they mean when they wring their hands about the budget deficit and blame it on increased defense spending proposed by the President.

Now, as I understand it, the President is proposing total outlays of $925.5 billion, of which for fiscal year 1985 $34.5 billion is increased defense outlays. That is 3.72 percent of the total outlays.

Now, is the problem really just that 3.72 percent of the budget outlays? If it is, we should be able to fix that rather easily, should we not? I have calculated the rest of the spending would have to be reduced by 3.87 percent to offset that $34.5 billion.

Now, is it really true that we cannot reduce other types of spending by a mere 3.87 percent in order to offset that increase in defense spending? Is our effort to help maintain peace in our time and defend our Nation's security not worth a 3.87 percent reduction in other spending outlays, if it is necessary? Would that really mean a 3.87 percent reduction in the number of Democrats in the House of Representatives? I do not think it would. I surely do not think so. And, besides, you would still have enough Democrats left to control the House of Representatives, would you not?

A TRIBUTE TO THE LATE HONORABLE WILLIAM B. WIDNALL

(Mrs. ROUKEMA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. ROUKEMA. Madam Speaker, I rise this morning to ask my colleagues to join with me to pay tribute to a man who served with distinction in this body for 25 years and to mourn his recent death.

William B. Widnall at one time held the congressional seat I now occupy and was the ranking minority member on the House Banking and Currency Committee. He served the people of his district and this country selflessly. His was the voice of moderation and reason, respected by Members of both parties.

Bill Widnall loved this institution and loved the people of New Jersey. His beloved wife, Marjorie, expressed it well when at the time of his passing she said that after he left the House, "It kind of broke his heart."

Bill Widnall was a pioneer in developing housing programs for the Nation's senior citizens. Indeed, the Widnall Towers in Hackensack, a senior citizen residential community, is a lasting monument to his dedication.

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S SYMPATHY ENDS WITH THE BIRTH OF THE CHILD

(Mrs. COLLINS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. COLLINS. Madam Speaker, I have been very disturbed by many of the President's comments over the past week, but I do not think any were as hypocritical or offensive as his remarks before the Christian Broadcasters' Association. The President expresses concern for the unborn, but it would seem his sympathies end with the birth of the child.

His proposed budget for the women's children and infant's program is insufficient to meet the current need. Unless supplemental funding is approved, 500,000 mothers and children will be forced out of the WIC program beginning in April of this year. Poor mothers and their children need our help desperately and they need it now if they are ever to climb out of the poverty that keeps them dependent upon government aid.

WIC is more than a social program—it is a survival program. I believe that it is one of the best investments we can make in our Nation's future. I call upon the administration to request supplemental funding so that the 3 million very alive children and their mothers who are dependent upon this program can receive this most basic of assistance.

MOST UNFAIR BUDGET IN HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARKEY. Madam Speaker, this is the most unfair budget in the history of the United States. While the Pentagon gets an additional $130 million a day, domestic spending is slashed billions. This is a budget which proposes to spend: More money for housing people in outer space than for housing our elderly on Earth; seven times more money for research on new missiles than for research on heart disease, cancer, diabetes, arthritis, and lung disease—combined; more money on military bands than for arms control; and, more money to do the laundry at the Naval Academy than for studying education for severely handicapped children.

Ronald Reagan, who 4 years ago promised us a balanced budget, today gives us a budget with the largest deficit in American history. The budget is a travesty, and I will oppose it as vigorously as I can. Yet this unfair budget should be no surprise—it comes to us from an administration that says that people are in soup lines because the food is good, and that they are homeless because they prefer to live on the streets.

A BALANCED BUDGET AMENDMENT

(Mr. PARRIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. PARRIS. Madam Speaker, at this time I had hoped to offer a unanimous-consent request calling for consideration of an amendment to require a balanced budget.

The Chair has ruled that in order to make this request, I must have the clearance of the majority and minority leaderships. The request has been cleared by the minority leadership. And I wonder if a spokesman from the majority leadership would give us the same appropriate clearance.

Apparently not, Madam Speaker. That should make it clear to the American people who stands in the way of a balanced budget, the Democratic leadership of this House.

LEGISLATION ESTABLISHING COMMISSION ON MISSING CHILDREN

(Mr. McEWEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McEWEN. Madam Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to establish the Commission on Missing Children. Over 1 million children disappear from their homes each year in America. Many of these children are the victims of senseless acts of violence and exploitation, of sexual and physical abuse. The children themselves and their families suffer through periods of great pain and frustration. This is no longer an issue that can be dealt with solely by individuals and families. It is a complex and tragic problem of national dimension.

The bill I am introducing today will bring together experts and professionals on the Federal, State, and local levels to conduct a comprehensive study on the problem of missing children. The Commission will offer solutions to help prevent the disappearance of children and to return missing children safely to their homes. Furthermore, the Commission will make recommendations to the President and the Congress for legislative and regulatory changes necessary to carry out the purposes of this act and will help establish a program to assist all those concerned with missing children.

Let us act together to gain a better understanding of this national tragedy and to provide children and families across this Nation with the support and assistance they so desperately need.

DEMOCRATIC CAUCUS DECISION ON LEBANON MAY POSE GRAVE THREAT TO AMERICAN LIVES

(Mr. GINGRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGRICH. Madam Speaker, I simply want to bring to the notice of the House that the fun and games being played by the Democratic Caucus about Lebanon pose a very grave threat to American lives.

There is a Syrian dictator whose staff watches the American news media and American politicians. There are Russian advisers to that dictator who watch the American news media and American politicians.

We had an 18-month truce on politics with American lives which tragically the Speaker of this House has decided to break.

Yesterday's decision by the Democratic Caucus may cost many American lives in the future, and as a reversion to the McGovern-Mondale wing of weakness, which may frankly threaten all of us before it is over.

IS DEFENSE SPENDING ON THE TABLE FOR CUTTING?

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Madam Speaker, the President has asked our party to negotiate on the budget deficit. And we welcome those negotiations. But a question remains: Mr. President, is defense spending on the table for cutting?

We have seen the defense budget go up countless billions of dollars with no cutting in sight. We have seen our Government pay $9,000 for a wrench that should cost 49 cents. We have seen the Secretary of Defense, Caspar Weinberger, "Cap the Knife," become "Cap the Sap."

Or are we going to ask the hungry and the homeless and the poor to once again bear all of the brunt of balancing this budget?

Once and for all, Mr. President, is defense spending on the table when you talk compromise and cut?

RESOLUTION CALLING FOR RESIGNATION OF CASPAR WEINBERGER

(Ms. MIKULSKI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. MIKULSKI. Madam Speaker, I rise today to introduce a resolution calling for the resignation of the Secretary of Defense, Caspar Weinberger. As the administration official in charge of the deployment of our Marines in Lebanon, he must take responsibility for the lax security at Marine headquarters in Beirut prior to the bombing which killed 241 Americans last October.

As a member of the Speaker's Ad Hoc Committee on Lebanon, I have been able to follow events in Lebanon with particular closeness. I have also read both the Long Commission report and the report by our own House Armed Services Committee which investigated the bombing. I believe the results of these investigations warrant the strong action I am proposing.

We now know from the investigations that our Secretary of Defense has mismanaged and miscalculated our mission in Lebanon and that even the bombing of our Embassy in Beirut last spring was not sufficient enough warning to Mr. Weinberger to direct our military to take the necessary precautions against the grim realities of terrorism.

We now know from the reports that the murkiness of our mission in Lebanon has increased the risks for the Marines there.

And we now know that our Secretary of Defense is more interested in finding shelter for the MX missile than in finding shelter for the deployment of our Marines.

If our troops are in Beirut on a political mission to keep peace rather than on a military mission to wage war, then the politicians who decide their fate and who fail to adequately provide for their safety must be held accountable for their negligence.

We must not permit the policy which has led to such tragedies as the Marine massacre to continue. It is time for Congress to hold responsible those persons who failed to protect our Marines. Since political decisions have put our men at risk, the policymakers must accept the blame. This is the very least we can do for the men who died and for their families and loved ones.

I urge my colleagues to join me and call upon the Secretary of Defense to resign.

INCONSISTENCIES IN THE BUDGET

(Mr. MOODY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOODY. Madam Speaker, this will be the second of a series of 1-minute speeches I will give regarding the internal inconsistencies of the 1985 Federal budget, which has just been submitted by the President.

Yesterday I pointed out that for the outyears of 1985 through 1989 it was impossible to simultaneously have: First, $180 billion deficits; second, robust economic growth, as indicated by the President's unemployment rate projections of 6 percent or less, and project—after inflation—growth rates of 4 percent; and third, continuously falling interest rates, as indicated by the President's projection for 91-day Treasury bills falling from 7.1 percent in 1986 to 5.0 percent in 1989. That is an impossibility.

We cannot have rapid economic growth—4-percent real growth would be rapid in light of our economy's performance in recent history—tight labor markets, huge budget deficits, and low interest rates. That the President expects us to believe that 1989 interest rates will be at 5 percent at the end of a sequence of hefty recovery, tightened labor markets, and huge deficits is preposterous.

Today, I want to point out another inconsistency. This one concerns the outyear deficits as percentage of GNP.

If you make different assumptions about outyear interest rates, then deficits as a percentage of GNP look very different. Let me give you two examples to illustrate the point. The President claims that 1985 and 1987 deficits will be only—only is used advisedly here—4.6 percent and 3.9 percent, respectively, of GNP. If we use an optimistic, but more realistic figure for interest rates of 8 percent, then deficits jump to 5.7 percent of GNP in each year.

These are not trivial differences, but represent billions and billions of dollars annually, as interest charges themselves become the heaviest and most rapidly growing component of the deficit.

Unfortunately, the internal inconsistencies of the President's budget seriously understates the magnitude of the deficit crisis and makes meaningful remedy that much harder.

PROVIDING DUTY-FREE TREATMENT OF PERSONAL EFFECTS AND OTHER ARTICLES OF FOREIGN PARTICIPANTS IN THE XXIII OLYMPIAD

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 290) to permit free entry into the United States of the personal effects, equipment, and other related articles of foreign participants, officials, and other accredited members of delegations involved in the games of the XXIII Olympiad to be held in the United States in 1984, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment, with an amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the House amendment, to the Senate amendment follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

That Subpart B of part 1 of the Appendix to the Tariff Schedules of the United States (19 U.S.C. 1202) is amended by inserting in numerical sequence the following new item:

"915.00	Personal effects of aliens who are participants in or officials of the XXIII Olympiad, or who are accredited members of delegations thereto, or who are members of the immediate families of any of the foregoing persons, or who are their servants; equipment for use in connection with the games; and other related articles as prescribed in regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury.	Free	Free	On or before 9/30/84".

SEC. 2. The amendment made by the first section of this joint resolution shall apply with respect to articles—

(1) entered, or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption, on or after the 15th day after the date of the enactment of this Joint Resolution; or

(2) entered under temporary importation bond after June 30, 1983 and before such 15th day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. FERRARO). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CONABLE. Madam Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of asking the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee if he will give us a basic description of the measure he is now asking us to consider.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONABLE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, House Joint Resolution 290, as it passed the House on April 28 last year, provided duty-free treatment of the personal effects, equipment, and related articles imported into the United States for use by foreign delegations to the 1984 summer Olympic games in Los Angeles.

On November 18 the Senate passed House Joint Resolution 290 with an amendment which deleted the Olympiad provisions in the House resolution and substituted a provision relating to information reporting requirements on State and local tax refunds. The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 required State and local governments to send a tax refund notice in January of each year. The Senate amendment eliminates the January notice requirement. Instead, under the Senate amendment, these reports could be sent out with the refund in the preceding April. In addition, the Senate amendment eliminates the notice requirement on 1983 refunds due on or before January 31, 1984.

The Senate amendment is estimated to reduce revenues by $20 million each year, as a result of reduced compliance due to individuals receiving the refund notice in April, rather than January of the subsequent year. In discussing the Senate amendment, the Committee on Ways and Means felt strongly that in these times of budgetary crisis, even $20 million was significant. If we are serious about deficits, we must be willing to act consistently with our rhetoric. The States have opposed this requirement, but they appear to be in better fiscal condition than the Federal Government. Further, the administrative costs to the States will be sharply reduced once the Internal Revenue Service is able to provide them the names of itemizers.

I propose that the House return House Joint Resolution 290, rejecting the Senate tax amendment and making technical amendments only to the original House-passed resolution providing duty-free treatment of equipment and personal effects for use by foreign participants and their families in the summer Olympic games.

The purpose of such treatment is to reduce the burden on the U.S. Customs Service of administering entry of these articles duty free under temporary importation bonds and enable it to concentrate resources on necessary security measures at the Olympics. Technical amendments I propose to the original House-passed resolution would terminate duty-free treatment on September 30, 1984 and apply it retroactively to entries which have already occurred since June 30, 1983, under temporary importation bonds.

It is the understanding of the committee that regulations will be issued by the Secretary of the Treasury to advise participating countries that articles accorded duty-free entry under this provision may not be sold in the United States and must be reexported unless consumed or totally destroyed. I understand that deletion of duty-free treatment in the Senate-passed resolution was inadvertent.

Mr. CONABLE. Madam Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to say that I support the modification of House Joint Resolution 290 to add back the original language of the resolution allowing duty-free entry of equipment and other effects of Olympic athletes and to strike the language added by the other body which would have repealed a provision enacted in the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982 (TEFRA). This provision required the States to notify taxpayers in January that any income tax refund they received the year before should be included in their Federal income tax computation if the tax previously was deducted for Federal income tax purposes. This provision was enacted because of a serious compliance problem in that individual taxpayers may deduct State taxes paid but may not include in income any refund of the amount which has been deducted. The Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that the repeal of this provision would result in a revenue loss of approximately $20 million per year. The States would like the provision repealed because it does involve some administrative expense upon them as a result of the mailing requirement. I agree with the decision to maintain current law. At least at this time, for several reasons.

First, the States receive a significant benefit as a result of their taxpayers being able to deduct the payment of State income taxes, because the effect of this deduction is to reduce the after tax cost to their taxpayers and thus increase the amount of tax burden which can be imposed on them. This deduction alone results in a revenue loss to the Federal Government of $15 billion annually. As a result, our requiring the States to assist us in a modest way to prevent the underpayment of tax from the failure to report refunds is not unreasonable.

Second, we have not had a sufficient opportunity to examine the claims of the State relative to the costs of implementing this requirement and thus it seems premature for us to move to repeal it now.

Third, the time period for sending the notifications for 1984 has already expired, and that should negate the need for haste as well.

Finally, it would appear curious, at the very least, if this body's first tax action of the year, as my distinguished chairman has pointed out, in a highly charged deficit-conscious atmosphere, were repeal of a provision which simply would insure that people pay the taxes which they already owe and which would result in a significant revenue loss.

Madam Speaker, I have no reason to maintain my reservation of objection. I withdraw it, and I ask the body to pass this legislation which the distinguished chairman has brought up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

IMPROVING WORKER TRAINING UNDER TRADE ACT OF 1974

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Madam Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3391) to improve worker training under the Trade Act of 1974, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the House amendment to the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the House amendment to the Senate amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

That section 201(d) of the Social Security Disability Amendments of 1980 is amended by striking out "for a period of three years after such effective date" and inserting in lieu thereof "until December 31, 1986".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. CONABLE. Madam Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the distinguished chairman if he would report the reason for this legislation.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, this legislation, as amended by the Senate, makes two changes in the Social Security Act:

First, it extends for 6 months, through June 7, 1984, the authority to continue disability insurance payments to individuals while they appeal a decision to terminate such benefits; and

Second, it extends for 3 years the temporary authority contained in section 1619 of the Social Security Act that provides for the continuation of SSI benefits and/or medicaid for disabled recipients who are able to work despite the continuation of their impairments.

Madam Speaker, my amendment would drop the 6-month extension of the authority to continue disability insurance payments during appeal. This issue is being considered as part of a larger reform of the disability insurance system and should remain a part of that comprehensive legislation.

My amendment would, however, accept the 3-year extension of section 1619. This program expired on December 31, 1983, and unless it is extended nearly 6,000 disabled individuals who are working will lose their SSI benefits and their medicaid benefits. This section was enacted as part of the disability amendments of 1980. It was intended to lessen the work disincentives for SSI disabled recipients who, under prior law, risked the loss of SSI and medicaid when they increased their work effort in spite of their disability.

Madam Speaker, this is a vital program for these disabled individuals. An extension of the program is supported by the administration and the Department of Health and Human Services has administratively provided for a temporary extension of the program in anticipation of congressional action. I urge my colleagues to agree with my unanimous-consent request.

Mr. CONABLE. Madam Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would like to add some comments to what the chairman has said about this measure.

In the final hours of the 1st session of the 98th Congress the other body sent us a Social Security Act amendment, using as a vehicle the "shell" of H.R. 3391, which had been a trade bill. The amendment contained two provisions, one of which would have extended section 1619 by 3 years, to December 31, 1986. CBO estimates the cost of this at about $5 million to $10 million annually.

The second part of the amendment would have extended by 6 months the provision in present law which permits social security disability insurance beneficiaries, who are found ineligible for benefits on review, to elect continued payments during appeal to administrative law judges (ALJ's). The 5-year cost of this amendment is $110 million, CBO reports.

The motion before us is to strike part 2 of the amendment and send the remains back to the other body. I must say that I have reservations about doing this, not because I object to the section 1619 SSI provisions, but because I want to see benefits continued to those who are appealing their removal from the disability rolls as a result of continuing disability reviews, or CDR's. Members may recall the mail and telephone calls they received when widespread hardship stories were reported throughout the country as a result of these CDR's.

Language to continue these benefits is, of course, included in title IX of H.R. 4170, which may be on the floor again within the next several months. There is some significant opposition to this language, however. Perhaps the possibility of passing H.R. 4170 is enhanced by the hardship which otherwise would result.

The provisions we are striking serves as a sweetener for H.R. 4170 and might enhance its chances of passage, but frankly, I prefer the bird-in-hand approach. I think we should assure continuation of payment as soon as possible and not gamble with this sweetener being able to pass the other measure, which is considerably broader and has several problems.

Section 1619 provides for maintaining supplemental security income and/or medicaid benefits for disabled SSI recipients who manage to do some work despite their impairments. The provision expired at the end of 1983, and I believe it should be extended. I will not use my reservations with respect to the other half of the amendment as a roadblock, but I do think the Members of this body should consider some of these strategic considerations and their possible implications for the future.

Madam Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection, and believe that the equities favor enactment of this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI)?

Mr. FORD of Tennessee. Madam Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to commend the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee for making this request. As the chairman pointed out, this program expired on December 31, 1983. This has created a terrible degree of uncertainty among those disabled individuals who, despite their disability, have been able to work as a result of the assistance they receive under section 1619.

The Subcommittee on Public Assistance and Unemployment Compensation, which I chair, held hearings on the extension of section 1619 on August 3 of last year. At that hearing, Bill Malleris, the executive director of the Center for Independent Living in Rochester, Minn., provided the subcommittee some very graphic case examples of the value of section 1619. I would like to insert an excerpt from Bill Malleris' testimony in the RECORD at this point:

In order for this committee to realize the impact of section 1619, a description of two cases should provide you with information that will, hopefully, assist in your decision. The first is a 26 year old woman who is a quadriplegic and requires an attendant to assist with her personal care and home care needs such as bathing, dressing, grooming, cooking, shopping and other needs. Vocational rehabilitation helped her complete a college program, providing funds for training and for attendant care. After graduating from college, she obtained full time employment as a computer operator with earnings of $650 a month. Although she briefly received attendant care under a State medical program, she eventually was told she must either quit working or lose her eligibility. Since she was unable to pay this herself, she decided to quit working.

The second case is a personal friend on SSI who has overcome great barriers with his disability. He is a quadriplegic who has no use of his legs, right arm and limited mobility with his left arm. He obtained his Bachelor's degree in 1975 with assistance from the Vocational Rehabilitation Program. He then moved to Minnesota to continue with graduate school. Since no Medicaid Title 19 was available to assist with Attendant Care costs, he was forced into institutional care. In 1978, he was able to move out into the community of Minnesota due to the Attendant Care Program funded through the Federal and State Governments.

While finishing his education, he began full time work for a Rehabilitation Center, but after the nine month Trial Work Period, he would lose SSI status and, therefore, eligibility for Medicaid Title XIX and Social Services Title XX which paid for his Attendant Care. Ultimately, he had to quit an excellent position at the conclusion of his Trial Work Period or be forced to return to a life of dependency and institutional care. The cost of such care far exceeds the cost of continuing to live independently in the community with partial benefits.

Passage of the 1980 Social Security Disability Amendments, which included the provisions in Section 1619, changed the picture dramatically for these two individuals. In 1981, my friend was able to obtain employment at another Rehabilitation Center in Minneapolis. He has retained Medicaid Title XIX and Social Services Title XX, and receives some SSI payments which make it possible to pay the additional expenses of living independently.

Today, he holds a new position with a private non-profit consulting firm that provides technical assistance on disability awareness to corporations and businesses in the private sector. The firm sponsors seminars that show supervisors and management how to work and communicate with disabled employees, thus, creating increased employment opportunities for persons with disabilities.

If SSI Special Benefits Amendment (Section 1619) is not continued, he will again be forced to quit his job in order to avoid institutional care, since he cannot afford the cost of attendant services without public assistance while engaged in employment.

The extension is noncontroversial, supported by the administration and by Members on both sides of the aisle. I urge my colleagues to support the chairman's unanimous consent request.

Madam Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI)?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ECONOMIC REPORT OF THE PRESIDENT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 98-140)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Joint Economic Committee and ordered to be printed:

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 1904, CHILD ABUSE AMENDMENTS OF 1983

Mr. WHEAT. Madam Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 350 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 350

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1904) to extend and improve the provisions of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Education and Labor now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule by titles instead of by sections, and each title shall be considered as having been read. It shall be in order to consider an amendment printed in the Congressional Record of October 27, 1983, by, and if offered by, Representative Miller of California and all points of order against the amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7, rule XVI are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri (Mr. WHEAT) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHEAT. Madam Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 350 is an open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate to be divided equally between the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor and makes in order an amendment in the nature of a substitute which is recommended by the Committee on Education and Labor and is now printed in the bill. This amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as original text for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule. The bill shall be considered by title instead of by section for amendment and each title shall be considered as having been read.

Additionally, Madam Speaker, the rule also makes in order an amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on October 27, 1983, by the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER). The amendment relates to the establishment of temporary shelters for victims of domestic violence. All points of order against the amendment for failure to comply with clause 7 of rule XVI, the germaneness rule, are waived.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 350 also permits a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Finally, Madam Speaker, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

H.R. 1904 extends and improves the provisions of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978. Specifically, the legislation extends authorizations of appropriations for programs established under the two acts for an additional 4 years, through September 30, 1987. Thirty million dollars have been authorized for fiscal year 1984 and 5 percent increases in authorizations are provided for the 4 succeeding years.

H.R. 1904 further amends the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act by adding several new provisions pertaining to the denial of nutrition, medically indicated treatment, general care and appropriate social services for infants determined to be at risk with life-threatening, congenital impairments. There have been reports that these services have been denied handicapped infants but provided for nonhandicapped infants who may have the same illness.

The provisions of this bill are designed to eliminate the distinction in services provided. The bill also directs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to review all model adoption legislation and procedures so that the adoption of infants with life-threatening congenital impairments can be facilitated.

In addition, Madam Speaker, H.R. 1904 further defines sexual abuse so that the definition conforms with the Supreme Court ruling in Ferber against New York. The bill also directs the Secretary to set a share of assistance under Public Law 93-247 to be used for activities to prevent child abuse and neglect. Finally, H.R. 1904 requires that moneys appropriated under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Adoption Reform Act be used solely for the purposes specified in legislation.

Madam Speaker, the problems of child abuse and neglect are ones which deeply concern us all. H.R. 1904 provides a means by which their causes and consequences can be examined, and solutions provided.

Therefore, I urge that we adopt the rule so that we may proceed to consideration of this important legislation.

Mr. LOTT. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 350 is a 1-hour open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983. The rule does provide for the consideration of the Education and Labor Committee's amendment in the nature of a substitute, now printed in the bill, as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule. In addition, the rule makes in order an amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 27, 1983, by and if offered by Representative MILLER of California, and waives the germaneness rule of the House, clause 7 of rule 16, against the amendment. That amendment would add a new title III to the bill authorizing $65 million over 3 years for grants to States to prevent family violence and provide shelter and other assistance for victims and dependents of victims of family violence. Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Madam Speaker, H.R. 1904 was unanimously reported from the Education and Labor Committee on May 5, 1983, by voice vote. The bill extends for for 4 years authorizations for programs established under the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978. Specifically, the bill authorizes $30 million in fiscal year 1984 for such programs, and increases that amount by 5 percent for each of the succeeding 3 years. This brings the total 4-year authorization to approximately $129.3 million.

Madam Speaker, I do not want to get into the detailed provisions of this bill during this debate on the rule since I am sure those will be handled adequately during the hour of general debate provided under this rule, as well as during the amendment process, I think it should be pointed out, however, that the committee has added some new provisions to the underlying statutes which are not totally without controversy and which will be the subject of some discussion and various amendments.

Probably the most prominent issue in this bill is the so-called Baby Doe provisions. H.R. 1904 would broaden the definition of child abuse under existing law to include infants who are born with life-threatening conditions and who are discriminated against by the denial of medical or nutritional treatment. The bill sets a timetable for the Department of Health and Human Services to meet a number of requirements relating to the denial of care to at-risk infants, and would make future State eligibility for grants under these programs contingent on compliance with procedures to provide care to at-risk infants and report known or suspected denial of such care. It is my understanding that the Baby Doe provisions of the bill will be subject to some perfecting amendments by the subcommittee chairman (Mr. MURPHY) as well as by others.

I would simply emphasize to my colleagues, in closing, that this is an open rule and that there will be ample opportunity to air these issues and consider various alternatives during the amendment process. The rule itself was reported from the Rules Committee by unanimous voice vote, and I urge its adoption.

Madam Speaker, I have no requests for time.

Mr. WHEAT. Madam Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 555, CONSTRUCTION WORK IN PROGRESS POLICY ACT OF 1983

Mr. WHEAT. Madam Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 375 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 555) to amend the Federal Power Act to limit the recovery by public utilities of certain costs of construction work in progress through rate increases, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Energy and Commerce now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, and each section of said substitute shall be considered as having been read. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. WHEAT. Madam Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 375 provides for the consideration of H.R. 555, the Construction Work in Progress Policy Act of 1983. It is a simple open rule allowing any germane amendment to be considered under the 5-minute rule. House Resolution 375 provides 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

The resolution facilitates the amendment process by making the Commerce Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute in order as original text for amendment purposes. Also, the rule safeguards the customary rights of all members by explicitly providing for a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute and for a motion to recommit the bill either with or without instructions.

There are no waivers of rules of the House recommended in this resolution.

Madam Speaker, H.R. 555 addresses the issue of how soon publicly held electric utilities can include the cost of new capital equipment in local rate bases. Traditionally, utilities have not received a return on such costs until the new equipment is actually completed and in service. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, however, has issued a rule allowing utilities to recover a substantial proportion of such costs during the construction period. If this policy is allowed to go into effect, it will result in local ratepayers footing the bill for facilities whose benefit they may never receive and will transfer the risk involved in undertaking expensive new projects from the utility's stockholders to local consumers. H.R. 555 will supersede this agency policy and establish instead a procedure under which the Commission may, on a case-by-case basis, allow electric utilities in truly straightened circumstances to include an appropriate amount of construction costs in local rates.

H.R. 555 addresses the needs of the relatively few financially pressed electric utilities, while insuring that local consumers will not be saddled with costs and risks more properly borne by the utilities' stockholders. I urge my colleagues to begin consideration of H.R. 555 by adopting the rule before us. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LOTT. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, House Resolution 375 is a 1-hour open rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 555, the Construction Work in Progress Policy Act of 1983.

The rule makes in order an Energy and Commerce Committee substitute, now printed in the bill, as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Madam Speaker, this bill would establish policies and procedures governing the inclusion of costs of construction work in progress in the rate bases of public utilities regulated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission. While the bill was reported from the Legislative Committee by voice vote, minority views in opposition to the bill were filed by eight minority Members.

Moreover, the administration opposes enactment of the bill on grounds that it would remove the discretion historically granted to the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to determine the appropriate level of construction costs to include in electric utility rate bases.

The rule was narrowly adopted by the Rules Committee on a 6 to 5 recorded vote.

Now, I am not going to ask for a recorded vote, because it is an open rule, but I want to register my feeling that this legislation should not be brought up. It has not been adequately considered by the committee. We did not have any notice that this rule was going to be taken up this week. It was not on the schedule that was given to the Members last week. We found out about it when we walked on the floor a few minutes ago.

The bill is not going to be considered until next week and, frankly, I do not think the rule should be adopted and certainly the legislation should not be adopted.

With those loving remarks, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Madam Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York (Mr. OTTINGER).

Mr. OTTINGER. Madam Speaker, I strongly urge adoption of the rule reported by the Committee on Rules with respect to H.R. 555.

H.R. 555 is a carefully drafted bill to prevent the imposition of unnecessary rate increases on the constituents of the Members of this body.

Briefly, what H.R. 555 does is to direct the extraordinary remedy of the inclusion of CWIP, or construction work in progress, in utility rate bases regulated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission, to situations in which that remedy is truly needed and, thus, is likely to be in the interest of the utility's ratepayers. The bill would overturn a presently effective FERC rule which is resulting in totally needless and unfair rate increases in New England and other regions of the country for powerplants that are not needed. If there was ever a rule that should be adopted so that the House can debate a matter of direct, economic impact on our constituents, it is this rule.

Let me explain why my subcommittee got into this area of regulation. We took this issue on because utilities and their friends at the FERC decided to let utilities include 50 percent of the CWIP costs in rate base on an across-the-board basis, without consideration whether any individual utility needs this extraordinary relief. The result is that utilities have begun to charge the customers of public power agencies and rural cooperatives for the costs of constructing new powerplants the need for which is questionable at very best. The effect of this rule change at the FERC is to transfer financial risk from shareholder to ratepayer, make ratepayers pay for plants that may be canceled and encourage utilities to ignore conservation and other less costly investments that they do not need CWIP for. Really, I could not stand by while this happened.

We started our consideration of this issue by taking up H.R. 555, as originally introduced by Congressman HARKIN. We decided that that bill needed to be made a little more flexible and so we adopted a substitute bill, which Mr. HARKIN supports, which I authored in subcommittee. This bill, with two small amendments, was passed by the subcommittee and, then, overwhelmingly reported to the floor by the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Our bill is fair to utilities. It says: If you can show that you have a bona fide need for CWIP in rate base to initiate or finish a powerplant or other resource that is needed, after you have seen whether conservation or other investments may be a better way of meeting your customer's demands, you can include some CWIP in rate base at the FERC. The key difference between our bill and the Commission rule is that we mandate that the Commission look at the facts of each case before deciding whether to allow CWIP. This is essential if we are to avoid the return of our country's electric utilities to a round of construction of expensive and often totally unnecessary new powerplants. Those of you from areas suffering under the onus of wildly uneconomic nuclear powerplants that threaten to drag down your local utility and its customers with it know what I am talking about.

I submit that the House must be permitted to debate these issues in open forum. That is what the rule reported by the Committee on Rules would allow. I urge adoption of the rule.

Mr. LOTT. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Madam Speaker, I have no further requests for time. I urge adoption of the resolution, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHILD ABUSE AMENDMENTS OF 1983

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 350 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 1904.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1904) to extend and improve the provisions of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978, with Mr. OTTINGER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY) will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ERLENBORN) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY).

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1904 is the only bill Congress will consider which protects children through our State child protection agencies. The bill is a product of many months of detailed study, committee action, and careful wording. I want to thank my colleague, Mr. ERLENBORN, for the many hours of dedication he contributed in making this bill a bipartisan effort. The bill was unanimously reported from committee, and I believe we have a sound measure for the House to consider today.

Much has happened since we last reauthorized this act several years ago. The committee has given careful consideration to all aspects of child protection, and has produced the following changes:

We now hold accountable persons who may abuse or neglect children while working in foster care homes or other residential facilities.

States may not use funds from this bill to investigate reports of child abuse or neglect in those residential facilities.

We redefine sexual child abuse to conform with a recent Supreme Court ruling in New York against Ferber. No longer will we have a varied definition of sexual abuse based on local definitions of pornography. We now have a uniform definition of sexual abuse which is tough on criminals.

Also in an attempt to maintain uniformity, we have given legislative authority to the States to address and investigate cases where infants are denied beneficial treatment solely because they are handicapped. Courts have no legislative guidance and have thus been handing down different decisions in various sections of our country. Our bill addresses the new phenomena known as Baby Doe by requiring the States to use a procedure in dealing with infants that is consistent with their current standards used for older children.

H.R. 1904 further provides for a 4-year reauthorization of $25 million for child abuse treatment and prevention programs through the national center in the Department of Health and Human Services. In addition, $3 million is reauthorized specifically for sexual abuse programs and $2 million for adoption opportunities programs.

Finally, the bill reaffirms the civil rights of all children to have an opportunity to live without fear of being denied the necessities of life. This includes section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 which applies to handicapped persons.

The committee has been working on this bill for over a year now. We have incorporated suggestions from medical organizations, rehabilitation groups, and advocates of the rights of children. The bill contains recommendations from the Surgeon General, child protection coalitions, and the Presidential Commission reporting on ethical problems in medicine and biomedical research. Furthermore, since the promulgation of HHS regulations has created a question of the impact of this legislation, I am offering a package of bipartisan technical amendments which insures that this bill and the regulations complement each other, clarify any misunderstandings, and assist, not hinder, the agreements worked out by all parties involved in this matter.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 1904 is a child protection bill. It addresses all forms of child protection. It has two important points, which if deleted, would create confusion throughout our judicial system.

First, we must address all aspects of child protection. To do less is to signal to the courts that we have no uniform standards on a national level. We would invite much litigation on the premise that the Congress did not intend to protect a child from the moment of birth until the age of legal reason.

Second, we must write child protection language in our codes and statutes. Administrative rules or regulations alone do not stand the test of time because administrations will change, and along with them the interpretations guiding those rules. I do not believe that we should leave child protection interpretations to bureaucrats who are not directly accountable to the American public.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I want to express my appreciation to all of my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who assisted me in committee, and to the 56 cosponsors of this bill. We had many other Members of Congress who expressed interest in cosponsoring, but House rules prevented us from adding their names after the bill was reported out of committee. You will find that H.R. 1904 and my bipartisan amendments are designed to conform to current law and regulations. It is a practical bill which creates reasonable procedures for States to follow. No Federal involvement is required in this bill. The principal question we should ask today is simply, "Do we in Congress intend to protect all children who can be protected?" My colleagues, your support of the committee version of this bill will answer in a resounding "yes."

Mr. Chairman, I am inserting an article I wrote on this issue.

WHO AMONG US SHALL DECIDE?

(By Congressman Austin J. Murphy)

A California judge recently ordered a hospital to force-feed a quadriplegic woman who was attempting to starve herself to death. She complained of severe pain and claimed that her life had no redeeming value. However, the court, following other precedents affirming life, ruled that the woman's personal welfare must be the ultimate consideration in its deliberations.

This nation was founded on a belief in life. Our society values life. Our scientists strive to prolong life. Our laws protect life. Over two centuries ago the Continental Congress affirmed the right of life to all citizens. Nearly two decades ago Congress prohibited discrimination on the basis of race, color, or creed. A decade ago Congress passed Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 prohibiting discrimination solely on the basis of handicap. These are the laws that show what this country was, what it is, and what the ideals have been which have defined our faith and shaped our history.

During the early days of this year's Congressional session, the House of Representatives will consider legislation I co-authored regarding the treatment of infants at risk born with life threatening congenital impairments. Known as the "Baby Doe" bill, H. R. 1904 reauthorizes funding for Child Abuse Programs as well as reaffirms the civil rights of handicapped infants. The bill guarantees that identical standards applied to older handicapped children be applied to handicapped infants—even if parents decide the child's life would be inconvenient, traumatic, or without acceptable quality.

The measure adds to our laws another structure basic to democracy. It affirms our determination that when a child is born handicapped, that child may share a place in our society. This seems to me to be an elementary right. Its denial is an arbitrary indignity that no American in 1984 should have to endure, but many do.

Not every child has equal talent or an equal ability or an equal motivation, but all children should have an equal right to develop their talent and their ability and their motivation, to make something of themselve. Members currently serving in both the U.S. House and Senate are handicapped. Years ago who among us could have said with certainly that my colleagues were not worthy of the high office they now hold?

When then should we deny medical or nutritional treatment to a newly-born infant, thus assuring its death? This is a moral issue some suggest is prohibited by the Holy Word and the American Constitution. Others believe that a minimum "quality of life" standard should dictate policy. It is, however, a matter Congress must soon address as both a moral obligation as well as an obligation of citizenship. For while some believe the physicians and parents should decide the minimally acceptable quality of life standards, I submit that previously enacted civil rights laws override the "quality of life" concept. A child who can live with reasonable treatment must live.

We cannot permit, through the eighties, any segment of our population to be denied an opportunity to live, to fall below the guarantees of our laws, or to be denied the experiences we, as a people, share. That is not an acceptable situation. However, we will not solve this problem by blaming any group or individual for past actions in the hospitals or in the courtrooms. But neither will this problem be solved by clinging to patterns of the past. Since many are hesitant to act in support of the infants' rights, nationwide guidance is needed if we are to move this problem from the courts to state child protection agencies.

I think we have an obligation of country, especially a country as rich as ours, especially a country with so much dedication to the promotion of freedom and the value of life, to establish another new priority in the series of anti-discrimination efforts. Congress must offer hope to the millions who are afflicted with handicapped conditions and to those who would be afflicted and not treated. In short, enactment of the "Baby Doe" bill at this session of Congress—however long it may take and however troublesome it may be—is imperative. It will go far toward providing reasonable men with the reasonable means of meeting these problems.

Many will, as in any debate, pressure the Congress to do less in this area as in so many others. They will tempt us to do something else that is perhaps easier. But the fight for handicapped rights must go on. That much we know. That much we can say with confidence and conviction.

Parents frequently must face decisions in hospitals of what therapy should be adopted to preserve a child's life, knowing that that therapy may bring about mental retardation or other complications. H.R. 1904 proposes no new forms of intervention into medical practice. Rather, it clarifies child abuse language so that state child protection agencies will investigate and dispose of cases involving infants in the same manner they do for two-year-olds, eight-year-olds, or sixteen-year-olds. The bill simply reaffirms two principles under current law.

The first reaffirmed principle concerns the states' obligation to assume custody of a child to order treatment over parents' objections. Established precedent in the American courts over-rule parents' religious convictions to prevent medical care, such as transfusions, when the treatment is vital to the benefit of the child. State child protection officials, not the Federal Government, have traditionally been the first line of defense for the child's welfare in the courts.

The second reaffirmation concerns Section 504 civil rights as they apply to the infants. Withholding of treatment is not automatically acceptable simply because the child is handicapped. The child is protected the first second after birth through the last second of life. Again, the right to life traditionally outweighs anyone's interpretation of a minimally acceptable quality of life. Even the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in its report, "Accommodating the Spectrum of Individual Abilities" (Clearing-house Publication 81), recently recognized such cases as involving violations of handicapped citizens' civil rights.

H.R. 1904 does not assume that all parents are child abusers. Nor does it conclude that medical professionals are potential child abusers. The legislation establishes Congressional intent that this problem is a national one and should be administered on a local level where the uniqueness of each case can be considered in a reasonable manner. We can then say with some assurance that, although children may be the victims of fate, they will not be the victims of our neglect.

It ought to be possible for Americans to rely upon medical professionals for a sound, constructive diagnosis. It ought to be possible for American parents to place an unwanted handicapped child in foster care, and it ought to be possible for today's American handicapped infants to someday serve in the U.S. Congress. In short, it ought to be possible to have some government guidelines regarding the rights and care of handicapped infants without dictating unreasonable and extraordinary medical procedures. H.R. 104 assumes these premises while placing local responsibilities under the child protection agencies' jurisdiction. It further insures that no child need die for reasons which are wholly in our control.

We face, therefore, a moral problem as a country and as a people. The heart of the question is whether all Americans are to be afforded equal rights and equal opportunities, whether we are going to treat handicapped infants as we want our children treated. We cherish life here at home, but are we to say to the world that this is a land of opportunity only to the physically strong; that we have no second-class citizens except the handicapped?

This nation, with all its hopes and all its boasts, will not be fully democratic until all its citizens, young and old, are protected. This is one country. It has become one country because all of us and all of our ancestors who came before us had an equal chance to develop their talents. They asked but for the one plain, proud, and priceless quality that unites us all as Americans: a sense of equality.

We in Congress must act, and will act, boldly by recognizing right as well as reality. The problem cannot be left to a minority who are inconvenienced by handicapped infants. It cannot be met by courts that have no legislative guidance. It cannot be quieted by token moves or talk. It is a time to act in the Congress, in state child protection offices, and above all, in all of our daily lives. Together we all must support the principles upon which this nation was built and provide the kind of equality of treatment which we would want ourselves—to give a chance for every infant to experience the limits of that child's talents. For who among us shall decide anything less?

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983, as reported by the House Committee on Education and Labor and amended by the bloc of bipartisan amendments to be offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY).

I do want to take a moment to commend the chairman of our Seclect Education Subcommittee (Mr. MURPHY), and the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER), for their untiring efforts to bring to the floor a sound bill that will not only extend but improve the act as well as the adoption opportunities provisions now in current law.

I shall first touch briefly upon the major provisions incorporated in H.R. 1904. Then, I would like to use the remainder of my time to explain the development and purposes of the bloc of amendments that Mr. MURPHY will be offering.

H.R. 1904, as reported, would—

First, reauthorize through September 30, 1987, all of the major expiring statutory child abuse and neglect and adoption opportunity authorities;

Second, provide fiscal year 1984 authorizations of appropriations for the title I child abuse and neglect programs and projects, those activities dealing specifically with the needs of sexually abused children, and the title II adoption opportunities initiatives of $25 million, $3 million, and $2 million, respectively. These authorizations are increased by 5 percent for each of the succeeding fiscal years;

Third, require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to provide technical assistance and training to help the States in developing and implementing new—or improving existing—procedures to be followed by child protective service agencies, health care facilities, health and allied medical professionals, social service providers, and courts of competent jurisdiction to better insure that nutrition, medically indicated treatment, general care and appropriate social services are provided to newborns at risk with life-threatening handicapping conditions;

Fourth, require the States to have, if not already available, procedures designed to more fully meet the very special needs of such infants. That provision in current law which requires States wishing to receive State grant moneys to "provide for the reporting of known and suspected instances of child abuse and neglect" is extended to include the reporting of instances involving the denial of nutrition, medically indicated treatment, and general care to Baby Doe infants;

Fifth, provide those States, who do not now meet all of the criteria necessary to receive State grant funds, a 2-year waiver, with the exception of those criteria relevant to Infant Doe situations, if the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines that such States are making a good-faith compliance effort;

Sixth, state unequivocally that "no provision in this act may be so construed as to limit or lessen any right or protection under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973;" and

Seventh, clarify the language in the adoption opportunities title to insure that the elimination of barriers to the adoption of special needs children extends now to severely handicapped infants at risk.

In summary, H.R. 1904, is designed to build upon the existing child abuse and neglect and adoption opportunities legislative framework in order to establish an appropriate and stronger Federal-State public and private sector partnership. This partnership will better insure that the very special needs of infants at risk with serious handicapping conditions are more fully met.

The challenge of improving this partnership that Mr. MURPHY, Mr. MILLER, and I, as principal cosponsors of this bill, have undertaken has been a difficult and protracted one.

H.R. 1904 has raised some vital, legitimate, and sensitive issues for a host of interested parties. We have spent months working with spokesmen representing medical professionals, health care facilities, child advocacy groups, the disability community, religious organizations, the administration and all those who cherish the sanctity of human life.

Our objective has been to resolve or narrow the outstanding differences that divide them. Out of this ongoing dialog have come some very constructive suggestions to clarify and improve some of the provisions of the bill relating to the needs of newborns at risk with serious handicapping conditions.

Let me cite one example. Section 106(3)(c) of the bill, as reported, required the Secretary of HHS to issue procedural guidelines to encourage and assist the States in establishing local health care review mechanisms to review to care provided in Infant Doe cases.

A number of medical and hospital spokesmen objected to this language. They argued that it could be construed so that the federally issued procedural guidelines would become the basis on which State child protective service agencies could mandate not only the creation but also dictate the type of local health care review mechanism by which local health care providers would be bound.

To address this concern, the bloc of perfecting amendments changes the original language to state that any HHS procedural guidelines issued encourage and assist those health care providers—not the States—desiring—and I emphasize "desiring"—to establish local health care review mechanisms for review of the care afforded to at risk severely handicapped newborns. This change should remove any doubts regarding the voluntary or optional nature of any HHS-issued local health care review mechanism procedural guidelines.

Not all of the interest groups with whom we have met will be totally satisfied with the provisions of H.R. 1904. Some have urged that we delay action on this measure and continue a dialog that has been under way for approximately 6 months. Others may argue that we should do nothing. A few will suggest that discrimination solely or exclusively on the basis of handicapping conditions would be beyond the realm of lawful or acceptable or compassionate behavior, if the individual in question were 2 years old, 5 years old, or 55 years of age.

Again, an illustration of my point is in order. If a robust 10-year-old youngster became a victim of a serious automobile accident and sustained a series of injuries that were both life-threatening and likely to result in severe and permanent handicaps, there would be no question in anyone's mind that this 10-year-old should receive immediately the best medically indicated treatment, nutrition, appropriate general care and social services.

Why, therefore, should a day old infant who, at birth, is at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments be denied the right to equal treatment and care?

Somehow, through a convoluted logic that I cannot accept, some will argue that such behavior can and should be tolerated in the case of infants or newborns. I do not understand—nor can I accept—a line of argument that life and death decisions involving newborns should be made differently from similar decisions involving older children or adults.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that H.R. 1904, with its perfecting child abuse and neglect amendments, enjoys not only broad bipartisan and public support but, first and foremost, is a bill that makes good public policy.

H.R. 1904 does not, in any way, interfere with or co-opt or second-guess the informed judgment of the medical profession in the care and treatment of at risk severely handicapped newborns. H.R. 1904, does not, in any way, require or invite that heroic and painfully intrusive treatment be provided for these children when such treatment is deemed futile. Moreover, H.R. 1904 is not a punitive measure.

H.R. 1904 does attempt to more adequately insure that equal treatment is afforded to severely handicapped infants at risk. H.R. 1904 does reaffirm any rights afforded these newborns under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

Mr. Chairman, let me also touch upon the fact that the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) has recently issued final regulations setting forth procedures and guidelines relating to nondiscrimination on the basis of handicap in connection with health care for handicapped infants. Published in the Federal Register on January 12, 1984, these regulations were issued under the authority of section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of handicap in programs and activities receiving Federal financial assistance.

Secretary Heckler, the Department of Health and Human Services, and others within the administration are to be commended for their untiring efforts to promulgate a set of regulations that seek to address longstanding and very difficult issues associated with the provision of medical treatment and health care for severely handicapped infants. Representatives from a host of organizations within the medical and disability communities are to be commended, too, for their willingness to particpate in this initiative in a spirit of full and constructive cooperation.

While it is higly unlikely that any body of regulations will fully satisfy all interested parties, it appears that all interested groups can and will continue to work together to refine and improve regulations designed to achieve a common goal.

Nonetheless, key policymakers within any administration may change—as can administrations themselves. With any such changes, major policy initiatives are reviewed and may be subject to sudden and dramatic changes or reversal. As a consequence, regulations—which appear today to enjoy broad-based support and represent a reasonable approach to a difficult social issue—are subject to change to reflect new directions in public policy.

In my view, Congress has a clear and necessary responsibility to establish public policy by taking timely and appropriate legislative action. We cannot abrogate this responsibility by acquiescing to a body of regulations with which we may agree today. Our obligation goes well beyond that. We have a responsibility to participate actively in the development of difficult public policy by taking positive statutory or legislative action. I believe that H.R. 1904 represents such a timely and positive step forward to the end that the rights of severely handicapped infants are more fully protected. I firmly believe that H.R. 1904 will provide a complimentary statutory basis for the HHS regulatory initiative developed under section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for H.R. 1904, as reported by the Education and Labor Committee and amended by the perfecting child abuse and neglect floor amendments to be offered by Mr. MURPHY.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ERLENBORN) has consumed 9 minutes.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado (Mrs. SCHROEDER) for the purpose of debate.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983, to extend the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Reform Act for 4 years.

This bill is dear to me. As a member of the Select Committee on Children, I think it goes a long way toward providing children with the treatment they so desperately need in this time of epidemic child abuse. As co-chair of the Congressional Caucus on Women's Issues, I am happy to see that Rep. GEORGE MILLER will offer an amendment to authorize $65 million to support programs to prevent family violence and get at the problem of spouse abuse. We have worked long and hard in the caucus on this issue for the past several years. I am glad to see that the House will be able once again to go on record to respond to this growing problem.

This bill is especially dear to me, however, because in 1973, I sponsored the first Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act of 1973 in the House. In the Senate, that bill was sponsored by then Senator Walter F. Mondale. The Mondale-Schroeder legislation began the Federal Government's involvement in fighting child abuse, primarily through special demonstration programs and research activities.

The primary program that laid the groundwork in the area of child abuse and prompted that first piece of Federal legislation is that of the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect in Denver. Its founder Dr. C. Henry Kempe, after whom the center has been renamed, and psychiatrist colleague, Dr. Brandt Steele, created a multidisciplinary team that has been a model for the development of hundreds of child protection teams in the United States and around the world. Because of his pioneering work in the treatment of child abuse, I have nominated Dr. Kempe for a Nobel Peace Prize.

I would like to point out to my colleagues some of the statistics and research that the Kempe Center has gathered on the child abuse issue. Dr. Richard Krugman, director of the center, reported to the Select Committee on Children findings of an analysis correlating severe child abuse cases seen in Denver from 1964 through 1982 and unemployment. Child abuse fluctuated in concert with unemployment peaking in 1974 and 1982, and declining for the years between. Dr. Krugman also noted that for the first 9 months of 1983, as the unemployment rate dropped, so did the number of cases of physical abuse.

The Select Committee's Task Force on Economic Security, which I chair, has been looking into unemployment and its effect on children. Indeed, its correlation with child abuse is very, very serious. For this reason, I am glad to see that H.R. 1904 provides that the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect is to study the relationship between unemployment and nonpayment of child support and the national incidence of child abuse and neglect, and report to Congress within 2 years. I, and the Congressional Caucus on Women's Issues, will be following the progress of the study.

Mr. Chairman, I again want to thank the subcommittee and the full committee for bringing this to the House floor and continuing the long hard-fought battle to get this issue in America's forefront and move it so that no child in America will ever have to be worried about being battered or abused again.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BARTLETT).

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act amendments of 1983. This act was developed in the spirit of bipartisan cooperation. Even though I have and other Members have considerable concern over the large percentage increases in the authorization for this program, I do support the Child Abuse Act and I support the bipartisan amendments that will be offered by Mr. MURPHY and Mr. ERLENBORN.

This cooperation has been continued even through recent discussions on Murphy-Erlenborn floor amendments to clarify and strengthen the committee's intent to insure that nutrition, medically indicated treatment, general care and appropriate social services are provided to infants with life-threatening congenital impairments. My colleagues, Mr. ERLENBORN and Mr. MURPHY, are to be complimented on their efforts and their dedication to insure that this language was put into this legislation in the most effective way possible.

Furthermore, I believe that we recognize the need to continue and reaffirm Federal assistance in adoption of hard-to-place children.

The inclusion of the "Infant Doe" provisions has enormous and positive significance for this Nation for the rights of handicapped newborns in this Nation. It was perhaps summed up best by George Will in his recent column in which he described as what he referred to as "unfashionable civil rights," the civil rights of those who at age 1 day or 1 week are too young and too helpless to speak for themselves.

Mr. Will continues:

> The treatment should not be withheld to cause the death of a newborn because parents decide, on the basis of the doctors' guesses, that the child's life would be inconvenient, disappointing or without acceptable quality.

Mr. Chairman, abused children have the right to protection and help so that they may grow up and achieve their God-given potential.

Now it is true, it is often difficult in these circumstances; choices often appear to be untenable and decisions are very difficult to reach. But infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments have a right to our protection and to our help.

The intent of the new Infant Doe in H.R. 1904 affirms simply and unequivocably that such infants are to be afforded the same rights to live that is guaranteed to an individual of any age with or without a handicapping condition.

These are rights and protections already guaranteed by section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act and other laws of this Nation and the 50 States.

I would read the applicable provision of the statute so there is no misunderstanding.

The States within 1 year would have procedures to place "to ensure that nutrition, including fluid maintenance, medically indicated treatment, general care and appropriate social services are provided to infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments."

The bipartisan package of amendments to be offered by Mr. MURPHY, if adopted, would complement—I repeat, would complement—not replace, regulations recently published by the Department of Health and Human Services.

And would assist those concerned with and those responsible for handicapped infants at risk to work in a cooperative manner.

These amendments attempt to strike a balance and flexibility which address concerns raised by HHS officials, disability rights groups, and associations representing the medical community.

But these amendments, nevertheless, protect the rights of the newborn infants to live.

It is my understanding that some of our colleagues may intend to offer other amendments to H.R. 1904, including perhaps new spending programs.

Mr. Chairman, I, for one, will oppose any new proposal which, no matter how nice sounding or enticing, would create new Federal agencies and new Federal programs by adding to the deficit, to unemployment, to unemployment lines, to inflation, and to the misery index of this Nation.

We have already increased the cost and the commitment of the dollar level of the Federal Government in child abuse by a significant amount and to add more to it, I think, would be counterproductive to the cause.

I would hope that since we have achieved bipartisan agreement on the sensitive Infant Doe provisions and since we have achieved bipartisan agreement on the rest of the Child Abuse Act and amendments which strengthen and add a significant positive approach to that act, that we would limit any additional amendments to those which would strengthen the bill without expanding its scope and would contribute to the adoption of the bill without dissension.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Puerto Rico (Mr. CORRADA).

Mr. CORRADA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse and Adoption Reform Act, which would extend for 4 years Federal efforts toward the prevention of child abuse and neglect.

Child abuse is a serious and growing problem in American society—1.1 million children are reported experiencing problems of mistreatment each year, and for every case reported, it is estimated that two cases go undetected. Child protection service programs are indicating increases in the overall number of reports of abuse, in the numbers of clients faced with economic problems, and in the numbers of serious injury cases and abuse-related deaths. In addition, studies have shown that economic pressures on the family, such as unemployment, are a factor in the incidence of child abuse, and the severity of that abuse.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to be cosponsor of H.R. 1904, which will reaffirm the strong Federal-State-local partnership which currently exists in meeting the needs of these abused children. While the Federal contribution to this network is relatively small in monetary terms, the leverage these funds represent in mobilizing State and local moneys is vital to the expansion of child abuse prevention and treatment services. Also, the role of the Federal Government in coordinating efforts in the various States and territories, providing a consistent reporting system throughout the Nation, has proved invaluable in developing the network of delivery systems now in place.

I urge my colleagues to join me in support of H.R. 1904, continuing the effective child mistreatment prevention and treatment efforts available to a growing number of abuse-prone children.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. CHANDLER).

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, when debating the questions of treatment of at-risk newborns, it is important that Members of Congress recognize that we are speaking of a decisionmaking process. The question is not whether children should be treated in order to live, or allowed to die as George Will would suggest. Rather, the issue is, who should decide: Should it be the State or the child's parents?

In spite of the considerable publicity attending the question of cases such as Baby Doe of Bloomington, Ind., and the more recent Baby Jane Doe from the State of New York, it should be understood that we are dealing with an issue represented by very few actual cases. The President's Commission on Ethical Problems in Medicine reported that of 3 million babies born each year in the United States, tens of thousands are premature and suffer congenital anomalies. Many would die if not treated quickly. "Yet," the Commission concludes, "it is rare for treatment not to be provided when it is predicted to provide a means of remedying the medical problem."

In the case of Baby Jane Doe, a couple from Port Jefferson, N.Y., faced the agonizing decision of whether to allow surgery on their daughter or withhold treatment. Without surgery, the child is predicted to die within 2 years. With surgery, the baby might live—no one can be absolutely sure—into her twenties. In any event, a team of specialists advised the parents that the child would be bedridden and massively retarded. The couple, which had anticipated the birth of their first child with excitement and enthusiasm, decided against surgery. They reached that conclusion after consultation with doctors, social workers, and clergymen.

In a unanimous opinion, the New York Court of Appeals decided that the parents of Baby Jane Doe had the right to decide this issue. The decision came in a case brought by a lawyer, previously unknown to the family, named Lawrence Washburn, who had somehow learned of the child. A trial court actually ordered the surgery, but that decision was overturned by the appeals court.

The court declared that the parents "in consultation with others, had responsibly decided upon a course of medical treatment." The decision went on to suggest that for anyone to take the action of Mr. Washburn was to, in effect, catapult him into the very heart of a family circle, there to challenge the most private and most precious responsibility vested in the parents for the care and nurture of their children * * *"

Again, the question here is not the decision reached for Baby Jane Doe, but who should make the decision. The New York Court of Appeals recognized that State law protects infants from uninformed and indifferent parental decisions. In those cases, according to the President's Commission on Ethical Problems in Medicine, "* * * the stage is set for public intervention."

Obviously, newborns are unable to make decisions for themselves and they will always need a surrogate acting in their behalf. The choice for the Congress is: Who should the surrogate be?

For those who advocate a State role, perhaps interjecting the child protection services of State welfare agencies, some points need to be considered. How well prepared are these people to make such decisions?

In testimony before the Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, Wayne M. Holder, director of the children's division of the American Humane Association commented on the quality of CPS personnel in relation to its task of preventing child abuse generally.

"* * * The current state of the art in child protective services is marginal to poor* * * The field has moved forward," he said. But serious problems in service delivery exist due to "overload, worker incompetence, inadequate supervision, inadequate leadership, lack of resources, and inadequate community support."

Is it reasonable to suggest that these people should make decisions on at-risk infants in place of parents? Why would they reach a better decision than a parent guided by doctors, clergy, and social workers? It seems clear to me that our faith should be placed in well-informed parents.

In addition, the President's Commission concluded that parents are best equipped to decide in behalf of their children. "Public policy should resist State instrusion into family decisionmaking * * *" the report concludes. Recognizing the difficult position of parents of at-risk infants, the Commission calls for well-informed decisions. Undoubtedly, parents who had anticipated with excitement the birth of a normal, healthy child, will be devastated emotionally to learn their newborn is seriously ill. They may be faced with conflicting advice from professionals. In all but a few cases, they will have no prior knowledge of the illness in question or the long-term prospects for the child. The mother will be recovering from delivery.

"Yet," the Commission concludes, "with suitable assistance, most parents can overcome these difficulties and make decisions on the child's behalf in an appropriate fashion." No one suggests that parents should face these issues without advice and counsel. In fact, the approach my colleagues and I propose would assure the best possible information and counsel for parents.

It would appear that the goal of some who advocate State control of decisions concerning at-risk infants take the view that, regardless of consequences, the lives of all infants should be maintained if it is technically feasible to do so. This raises the moral question of whether it is more correct to keep a seriously ill child in suffering or to allow nature to take its merciful course. In many cases, the issue is not whether the child will die, but when.

In Coquille, Oreg., parents of a newborn were brought to court by Oregon Right to Life when they chose not to allow any treatment of their newborn. All sides in the case agreed that the child could not possibly live regardless of treatment given.

An article in the April 23, 1983, Washington Post described the infant. "The girl's skull had not grown together properly, and a membrane sac containing fluids and some primitive brain parts hung from the back of her head. * * * The infant's brain was only partly intact. She was apparently unable to see or hear."

The child has, of course, died. But not before the family of the infant was dragged into court. An Oregon State assistant attorney general expressed outrage that "* * * a family which had the trauma of having a deformed child in the first place should then be dragged into court and have it suggested that they are not being proper parents."

In testimony before the U.S. Senate, Father John J. Paris, S.J., associate professor of social ethics at Holy Cross College called those who believe life should be sustained under any circumstances, "vitalists." This view, he states, requires that life be prolonged "regardless of the quality, regardless of the cost, regardless of the consequences, regardless of the suffering." In rejecting the notion that there are never instances when it makes sense to withhold medical treatment, Father Paris said, "Life-sustaining interventions are not always morally obligatory, not morally obligatory for handicapped children, nor morally obligatory to any other patient."

Once again, a reminder. The issue facing Congress is not "life or death." The question is who, of those involved, is best suited to reach a decision when a seriously ill newborn faces death without medical treatment.

My conclusion is, the parents. Because we are human, no one can guarantee the "correct" decision in every instance. But since a surrogate must make the decision, agonizing though it may be, why not allow the very people who must live with the consequences to do it. We must provide the best possible advice and counsel, both medically and spiritually. And practitioners must be constantly alert for those who would selfishly sacrifice a newborn out of convenience or indifference.

There are mechanisms in law to deal with the exceptions in these cases. And we often read about them. But in the few cases which do occur where a decision must be made between life and death for an infant, let us allow the parents the freedom they deserve to make the decision without privacy-violating intrusions from outside.

When we reach the point of the debate on the Chandler amendment today, which will be a substitute offered to the Erlenborn amendment, I hope my colleagues will keep these thoughts in mind, that we are debating a decisionmaking process, and we are trying to protect the rights of people to act in behalf of their children.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Let me assure the gentleman that the example that he gave about the case of the child who was going to die, in any event, would not be affected by the legislation brought out by our committee. There is no requirement in this legislation, and we have made it very clear, not ony in the legislation but in the supporting reports and our colloquy here on the floor, there is no intention to require futile treatment to prolong when there is no chance for a successful recovery of the child.

So the example you give is, of course, heart rending, but would not be affected by this legislation.

Mr. CHANDLER. If I might just respond for a moment, my concern is that the gentleman's amendment certainly does provide for maintenance of the child, fluids, feeding, which any rational person would suggest. But medically indicated treatment is a broad term without definition and certainly people will disagree, as they did in the case of the Coquille baby. My concern is that one person's medically indicated treatment is another person's futile gesture, and that even in a case like that the potential does exist for abuse of what I think were the parents' rights to make a decision.

Mr. ERLENBORN. If the gentleman will yield further, let me suggest to the gentleman that I agree that medically indicated treatment is difficult to define. But the gentleman is aware, I believe, that the regulations adopted under section 504 do encourage the medical panels to be established in health care facilities so that medical experts can give their advice as to what is medically indicated.

Our legislation would do the same thing, would encourage the creation of these panels, and that was something suggested by the medical profession itself. I think that both the regulations and this legislation will help resolve that question.

But let me suggest to the gentleman that your basic premise that the parents should have the sole authority to make this decision is faulty.

Let me suggest to the gentleman that already we have had many cases where there are life-threatening conditions to a child, regardless of age, where blood transfusions have been medically indicated and there was no question but what that was medically indicated; but for religious or other reasons the parents have decided that the blood transfusion would not be given to the child.

It already is well established in many of these cases that the interested parties may go into court and have a guardian ad litem appointed to make that decision over the objections of the parents, because the decision to protect that child is more important than the privacy of the parents.

I would also suggest that this argument of privacy and the parents being paramount is already recognized as having limitations if food, nutrition or medically indicated treatment for a child who is not a newborn with a life-threatening condition is being withheld by the parents in their own home, the authorities can go into that home and remove the child from the home to see that the child gets the care and the attention the child is entitled to.

So there are exceptions already to the privacy argument and to the argument that the parents have the sole authority to make this decision. I do not see, in my own personal opinion, why a newborn infant should have less protection under the law than the older.

Mr. CHANDLER. I would quarrel with the point that they do have less protection. I agree with the gentleman in the case of a child who is ill and the parents, for religious reasons, want to withhold treatment, the States do have a right to intervene, and they do. That is also true of newborn infants. In the case of Baby Doe in Bloomington, Ind., it was the medical authorities who brought that case to the attention of the courts.

The tragedy is twofold: First, we do not know very much about the case, because the records have been sealed, as the gentleman knows; the other is that the process could not act quickly enough to save that child, in any event. It died, I think, within 8 days.

I maintain we do not need to do what H.R. 1904, with the gentleman's amendment, proposes, because, as the gentleman points out, that is already taken care of with a statute that is protecting children and their rights at this point.

Mr. ERLENBORN. If the gentleman will yield further, the argument seems to be made today that the newborn infants do have less rights. As a matter of fact, from the reports that I have seen, the Bloomington baby died, yes, during the court proceedings because food and water were withheld from the child.

That child was starved to death. I really do not see that the parents should have under any circumstances the right to starve a child to death.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, just to advise the gentleman from Washington, I appreciate his concerns. I would like to request that he listen very carefully and examine the amendments that we have prepared from the committee, and he will find that there is little or no Federal involvement in this entire matter. We are relegating to the States the supervisory matter through their existing child welfare agencies, there will be no additional layer of bureaucracy, and also I am sure that the gentleman recognizes that 85 percent of child abuse cases are already being reported by our medical facilities and by our medical authorities. We appreciate that. We are attempting to encourage it insofar as infants are concerned, and, likewise, to protect the medical profession when they do that reporting and when they have to make those very vital decisions.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the gentleman then saying that the applicable words in the gentleman's prepared amendments are very carefully drawn to refer only to medically indicated treatment, and nutrition. The amendments have established a mechanism to help define medically indicated treatment. What the committee proposes and what the bipartisan amendments propose is to insure that if medical treatment would otherwise be appropriate, it would not be denied to a child merely because a child has Downs syndrome or has some other handicapping condition? The amendments, as the gentleman knows, have been carefully drafted to protect all interests, but primarily to protect that infant from being starved to death or having appropriate medical treatment withheld merely because of a handicapping condition. Is that the intent and the letter of the statute?

Mr. MURPHY. The gentleman is totally correct. That is the intent. And when the amendments are unveiled in a very few minutes, he will see that his statement is exactly correct.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman.

● Mr. RATCHFORD. Mr. Chairman, children are our most precious commodity. They are our future. As a civilized society, it seems quite ironical that there is a need for legislation to protect our children from the evil of child abuse. In 1982 alone, over 900,000 cases of child abuse were reported to local and State authorities. If nothing else, this is a very strong statement about our society. We advocate peace and democracy around the world. Yet, in our very own backyard, thousands of innocent children are being betrayed by their parents and by our society.

These children experience physical cruelties which should not be inflicted on any living being, let alone innocent children. The real damage, however, is the emotional harm that is usually permanent. Studies show that some 90 percent of abusive parents were themselves abused children, many of whom grow up and spend a great deal of their adult lives in therapy. And sadly enough, many are never really able to lead truly productive lives. What we have is a vicious cycle where generation after generation of an entire segment of our population were abused children. This is such a tragedy and such an ugly scar on our entire society.

As a society we pay a high price for this tragedy. Studies of prison populations show that 90 percent of all inmates claim to have been abused children. This suggests a direct link between criminal activity and the abused child. Furthermore, the costs of medical bills and absenteeism related to child abuse causes are a tremendous burden on our Nation.

The Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act has indeed led us closer to eliminating this horrible problem. The various programs funded under this act have been instrumental in preventing child abuse, providing counseling, and in bringing about public awareness of this problem.

I, therefore, rise in support of the reauthorization of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act with hopes of continued success in combating this problem which so burdens our society. I sincerely believe that what we accomplish here today will help clear up this ugly scar on our Nation, thereby ending this nightmare for thousands of innocent children.●

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Miller amendment to H.R. 1904, the family violence and prevention services amendment.

Several months ago, Time magazine brought the horror of family violence out of the closet, and into the public eye. The victims of family violence, who even to this day must hide their bruises, burns, and broken bones in a cloak of secrecy because there is seldom any place to go for help, revealed their awful stories in the center pages of this popular news magazine. No one who read their stories could walk away unaffected.

That cover story did in 1 week what many in Congress, including the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues, have been trying to do for 5 years. It made all of us painfully aware of the need for legislation responsive to preventing the violence which kills thousands of women, children, and elderly persons every year.

Clearly, domestic abuse prevention projects across the country lack sufficient funding. Of the 650 projects existing nationally, more than three-quarters reported that they are unable to meet the needs of the communities they serve. Many report having to turn away 10 people for every 1 they serve. And still, many communities have no such projects at all.

Family violence occurs with startling frequency in millions of American homes. The senseless beating and brutalization of children, wives, and elders is particular to no income level, to no race, to no age, and to no community.

Each year about 600,000 cases of elder abuse are reported nationally. Further, at least 652,000 children are abused, neglected, or sexually exploited every year. Child abuse ranks as the second leading cause of cerebral palsy—tragic testimony to the extent of abuse existing in the American family.

Yet another gruesome fact is that 6 million wives will be beaten by their husbands this year. Two thousand to four thousand women will die as a result of these beatings.

Battery is the single major cause of injury to women, more significant than auto accidents, rapes, or muggings. Further, many women are forced to remain in homes where their lives are at risk every day, because there is simply no place else to go. The Miller amendment will help provide community shelters and counselors trained to deal with the terror many women and children experience within their own homes.

Finally, the Miller amendment considers not only the jeopardies existing within the home, but the risks faced by those outside the home whose duty it is to intervene. Law enforcement officers know firsthand the reality of domestic violence; 20 percent of all officers killed while on duty and 40 percent of all such injuries were incurred by police when responding to a domestic violence call. The Miller amendment provides $2 million for the training of law enforcement officers vulnerable to such violence in the course of their job duty. Not only must our police be able to protect themselves, but also the millions who need their protection—not on the streets—but in the awful privacy of their own homes.

I urge my colleagues to support the family violence prevention and services amendment.●

● Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of four specific amendments to H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983.

As chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, I cannot stress enough how important these protective and innovative amendments are to the quality of life of far too many older Americans.

The first amendment, offered by my distinguished colleague from California (Mr. MILLER) if passed will: Authorize $65 million over the next 3 fiscal years for State grants to support programs to prevent family violence and provide immediate shelter to victims of family violence; insure that at least 75 percent of the State funds must go to agencies that provide immediate shelter to family violence victims; require that the grant recipients must provide a local match, half of which must come from private sources, and individual grants would be limited to $50,000 per year; authorize $2 million for each of the next 3 fiscal years for training programs for law enforcement officials to handle family violence cases; and direct the Department of Health and Human Services to study the extent of abuse of the elderly.

The remaining three amendments of which I speak will be offered as amendments to the Miller amendment by fellow Aging Committee members, Representatives BIAGGI, OAKAR, and RINALDO.

Congressman BIAGGI, whose Subcommittee on Human Services of the Aging Committee, has done extensive research and work in the issue of abuse and the elderly, will offer an amendment to the Miller amendment to prohibit discrimination based on age in the use of family violence prevention funds, and to explicitly include in the definition of family violence, abuse of elderly family members.

Congresswoman OAKAR, who is an extremely committed and active member of the Aging Committee, will offer an amendment to the Miller amendment to establish a National Center on Elderly Abuse to study and disseminate information on this problem, and to direct the Department of Health and Human Services to study the need for and implications of requiring State or local authorities to report to HHS on the incidence of family violence.

Last, Congressman RINALDO, the ranking minority member of the Aging Committee, will offer an amendment to the Miller amendment to require HHS, in conducting its study of elderly abuse called for by the Miller amendment, to consult and coordinate with the Administration on Aging and the National Institute on Aging.

Again, I voice my strong support for the Miller amendment and subsequent Biaggi, Oakar, and Rinaldo amendments. And I urge my colleagues to vote for their passage; 600,000 cases of elderly abuse a year is proof enough that help is needed immediately.●

● Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, as a strong supporter of the need to provide Federal moneys for the prevention and treatment of child abuse, I rise today in support of H.R. 1904, Child Abuse Amendments of 1983. It is indeed encouraging to note that finally our Nation is beginning to realize the long- and short-term effects of child abuse on the individual and our society.

It is currently estimated that 1.5 million children in this country are victims of abuse and neglect. It is also estimated that close to 2,000 children die each year under circumstances which suggest child abuse. Such atrocities can only be stopped or prevented if Congress steps in to strengthen and properly fund programs to identify and combat child abuse.

It should come as no surprise to any of us in Congress that child abuse incidents are on the rise. There is a direct correlation between high unemployment and cutbacks in social services and mental health funding and the increase in the abuse of children by frustrated adults. Leave it to the President to cure this problem by requesting $9 million in funding in fiscal year 1984 and for pushing through Congress legislation which eliminated funding for sexual abuse programs.

Surely any intelligent person could understand the need to fund newly recognized forms of child abuse: child pornography. The bill before us does, to the tune of $3 million. Toward that end, I fully support an amendment to increase funding for sexual abuse prevention. The statistics on sexual abuse are shocking. A confirmed national estimate is that one in four girls are victims of sexual mistreatment by age 18.

Let me take this opportunity to highlight a provision of this bill that I firmly believe should not be included.

As my colleagues are aware, the Baby Doe issue has surfaced again. This bill now requires that the Health and Human Services Department determine instances where medical care, nutrition, or social services are withheld from infants born with severe, life threatening congenital handicaps. We have absolutely no business legislating this determination. Unfortunately all we will do if we allow this provision to stand is create even more confusion for the courts. That is why I plan to join my like-minded colleagues in voting for the Waxman amendment which, if adopted, will strike this provision.

I also support an amendment to authorize money for State grants to support programs to prevent family violence, provide shelter to victims of family violence and direct HHS to study the extent of abuse of the elderly.

In closing, let me say that H.R. 1904 provides for $30 million worth of concern, love, and most of all, ACTION. A figure that is approximately one-fifth of the price of just one of the 100 MX missiles the President has requested.●

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, the Child Abuse and Adoption Reform Act (H.R. 1904), which is in need of reauthorization today, is a piece of legislation which attempts to target some of the most important problems facing us and our children today. It has been estimated that child abuse and neglect claim approximately 1.5 million victims annually, and an estimated 2,000 children die each year under circumstances that suggest child abuse. Furthermore, children residing in foster homes and institutions deserve the chance for a loving and caring homelife that will enable them to grow up in a stable environment with parents who have the time and love to devote to them. H.R. 1904 contains important provisions designed to increase the opportunities for all these children, and I appreciate having the time to discuss them with my colleagues.

The National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect was established a decade ago; it was meant to focus attention on the growing problem of child abuse and neglect, and was charged with both collection and dissemination of information on the subject and incidence of this tragedy. Today we strengthen the act by asking the center to indentify and disseminate information about practical and effective approaches for preventing child abuse and neglect. It has been noted that there is a relationship between nonpayment of child support and the incidence of child abuse and neglect. Statistics reveal that of the 4 million women awarded child support payments in 1983, only 1.9 million received the full amount, 1 million received partial payment, and 1.1 million did not receive any payment at all. These children therefore, appear to be "at risk" for child abuse and neglect, since the increased and inequitable financial burden that the female head of household is forced to bear becomes the germ for possible neglect or abuse. Other pertinent information uncovered by the Committee on Education and Labor includes the fact that 80 to 90 percent of the Nation's male prison population were abused as children. By strengthening programs that are designed to prevent and study child abuse and neglect, we can hope that future years will see a drop in our prison population.

Another section of H.R. 1904 deals with adoption opportunities available to prospective parents and needy children. Whenever possible, children who are now living with foster families or in institutions should be permanently placed with an adoptive family. The legislation before us would facilitate the elimination of barriers to adoption, and would take into particular account the special needs of special children. The Department of Health and Human Services is requested to promote quality standards for adoption services, including preplacement, postplacement, and postadoption counseling. Furthermore, a national adoption and foster care information data gathering and analysis system is advocated, and a national adoption information exchange system would be most valuable in bringing together children who would benefit from adoption and qualified prospective parents.

One problem that I have been pursuing and will continue to probe is a solution to siblings who were separated at birth or later, and now wish to establish contact with each other. Although there is much controversy surrounding this situation, it is agreed, I believe, that siblings should have the right of contact. I appreciate the opportunity to work with the committee on this problem, and look forward to our continued mutual efforts in this area.

The funds provided by this act today will continue and strengthen our commitment to the next generation. In order to facilitate this duty, I reiterate my support for the demonstration and research projects conducted by the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect as well as the strengthening provisions of this reauthorization. One amendment offered today, and which I was pleased to cosponsor, would create a new title for the bill, in order to allocate funds for State grants to support programs to prevent family violence and provide immediate shelter to victims of family violence. This important provision would require that at least 75 percent of the State funds must go to agencies that provide immediate aid and comfort to family violence victims, and that grant recipients provide a local match of which half must come from a private source. Individual grants to combat this tragic situation would be limited to $50,000 a year, while moneys are authorized by the amendment to train law enforcement officials to handle family violence cases.

Family violence is a serious and growing problem, and by targeting families, children, and single parent households through this legislation, we can hope that these individuals can be assisted in living stable and happy lives. There can be no more laudable effort than that which seeks to improve the quality of life for all troubled people, and with that in mind I urge my colleagues to support these important changes of law. Accordingly, I urge passage of the Child Abuse and Adoption Reform Act, and urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.●

● Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the family violence prevention and services amendment to H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983.

Family violence is a severe problem affecting millions of men, women, and children throughout this Nation. It harms family members of all ages and of all economic and racial backgrounds.

It should be clear, Mr. Chairman, that the problem of family violence is one that deserves national recognition.

This legislation, if passed, will create the only Federal program to specifically address this issue. The only two Federal programs ever in existence are now discontinued. The Reagan administration's task force on family violence is a good start in recognizing the severity of the problem, and it is now time to build on that beginning and implement prevention and treatment services to the victims of family violence.

I would like to remind my distinguished colleagues that because of its matching requirements, this legislation will stimulate the States to address the family violence issue on their own. It will aid the States to better accommodate the growing need for services for abuse victims.

I know that in my own State, there is a significant and growing need for family violence prevention and treatment services. Utilization of the existing services is rapidly increasing. Between fiscal year 1982 and fiscal year 1983 alone, there was an 80-percent increase in the number of adults and children served by emergency and counseling services. Furthermore, there was a 101-percent increase in the services provided to children alone.

To summarize, then, Mr. Chairman, family violence is a severe and widespread problem. It threatens the mental and physical well-being of millions in America. There is a great need for a Federal commitment to treat its victims and prevent it from spreading further. I urge this distinguished body to create the only Federal program that would address this critical issue.●

● Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, the date December 3, 1973, stands very clearly in my mind, for it was on that day that I rose as I am today in support of legislation to fight the national scourge of child abuse and neglect. In 1973 I was working for the passage of the first law ever to address this national problem. Today I rise to urge we renew and expand this program for an additional 4 years. I assure my colleagues the problem is as serious today as it was in 1973, thus our commitment to act must be as strong.

Before discussing the many salient features of this legislation which I am proud to be a cosponsor, I must comment and convey my strong opposition to the fiscal year 1985 budget proposal for child abuse programs. It would eliminate entirely funds for discretionary programs under the Child Abuse Act, while once again freezing funding levels for State grant programs. It is an unconscionable cut directed at a program which works to combat a most serious problem. I hope all of my colleagues who are here today to support this bill will maintain their advocacy when it comes to providing necessary appropriations in fiscal year 1985.

My involvement with the issue of child abuse and neglect prevention and treatment encompasses my entire 15-year career in Congress, for the very first bill I ever sponsored was a forerunner to Public Law 93-247. I worked closely with the development of the initial law and with subsequent amendments in 1978. Again today, I am proud to have worked closely with the distinguished subcommittee chairman, Mr. MURPHY in fashioning a bill which reaffirms our commitment to this program.

The importance of retaining the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act remains critical as long as the problem it seeks to eradicate remains serious. In this Nation we saw a doubling of reported child abuse cases between 1976 and 1981. The rate has increased another 12 percent in the past 2 years. Major increases have been recorded in the past year in a number of States, including my home State of New York. The national concern about this problem is dramatically indicated in a recent Harris poll which placed public concern for this problem at 90 percent as compared to just 10 percent in 1976.

H.R. 1904 provides a blueprint for the future of the Child Abuse Act. It reaffirms a support for key provisions in the act and key programs that have developed from the act. It also broadens the scope of the act to address a number of new concerns in this area. Finally, if certain amendments which I support are approved, we will in the confines of this bill, recognize the tragic intergenerational aspect of abuse and will take first-time steps to deal with the problem in all of its component parts.

Before detailing some of the specifics of the bill as reported by the committee, I wish to focus on one amendment which I offered which was approved, authorizing a study to determine links between nonpayment of child support and child abuse. The fight against child abuse and the fight against non- or underpayment of child support are by far the two major children's rights issues of our day. The nonpayment of child support contributes in a significant way to economic abuse for more than 13 million children in this Nation today. These children are deprived of some $4 billion in needed support payments which, when combined with the fact that the average mother suffers a 73-percent decline in income in the first year following a divorce, presents a grim picture in many households across this Nation. The study I am calling for should establish the link and then should provide us with the impetus to pass even stronger laws to combat this problem.

H.R. 1904 as reported, provides grants to eligible States to assist them in the implementation of programs which provide for prevention and treatment activities. These programs include the all-important reporting of known or suspected cases of abuse and neglect, which must be improved, for it is estimated that as much as 75-90 percent of abuse cases go unreported. H.R. 1904 also provides for investigation of such reports by authorities; provision of protection and treatment of endangered children providing for effective administrative procedures and personnel to deal with abuse and neglect, immunity provisions for those persons reporting cases, confidentiality of records being kept and fostering cooperation between all social service agencies which have a role in the prevention and treatment activities by States. States also provide funds to parental groups which can assist victims as well as abusers.

Mr. Chairman, I will add a number of other elements to my statement in support, but let me observe that the program we are discussing and hopefully expanding is one of the most important domestic programs we have. It is a program which reflects on us as a society. It is a program which mirrors a national conscience of concern about young oftentimes defenseless children suffering from abuse and neglect. It is a program which has the courage to take the problem out of the closet and bring forth solutions. We are developing a perception problem in this Nation that we do not care about the needs of our children—if we fail to pass this bill today—we will go beyond a mere perception problem—it will be a reality and a disturbing one at that. Let us not have that happen.

In addition to State grant funds, the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect (NCCAN) is continued. In H.R. 1904 this Center has been critical in providing technical assistance to States as well as providing research and demonstration projects which help us detect, prevent, and treat child abuse.

The success of this program is best indicated by the historic growth in the program as well as the increased number of eligible States, which have increased from 3 in fiscal year 1974 to 48 in fiscal year 1982. Funding for the program began at a modest $4.5 million in 1974 and remains at $16.199 million today. This is a reduction from fiscal year 1980 which has seen the program grow to $22.9 million, which included a new, separate authorization and appropriation of $4 million specifically for sexual abuse activities. This earmark was removed in the 1981 Omnibus Reconciliation Act but is reinstated in H.R. 1904 at a level of $3 million.

This bill extends these programs for 4 years, through fiscal year 1987, at a level of $30 million in fiscal year 1984 with a 5-percent increase each year thereafter. Of this $30 million in fiscal year 1984, $25 million is authorized for State grants and $3 million for sexual abuse activities.

As mentioned earlier my deep and longstanding involvement in this issue has encompassed my entire congressional career but its origins can actually be traced back to my days as a police officer in New York City for some 23 years. I saw the problem firsthand and also made acquaintance with one of the main pioneers in the fight against child abuse and neglect—Dr. Vincent Fontana who to this day continues to be involved and committed and his counsel remains invaluable to me.

The 1974 act and the subsequent amendments in 1978—Public Law 95-

266—placed a national spotlight on the problem and provided States the funds to attack the problem once they put into place the appropriate State legislation.

The 1981 Omnibus Reconciliation Act reauthorized the program through this year and made substantial cuts in State grants. As a strong opponent of the 1981 Reconciliation Act, I believe that passage of H.R. 1904 today will assist us in restoring, in part, some of the much needed funding that was eliminated in 1981.

Let me take a moment to discuss an issue in this legislation which has evoked great controversy. I refer to the so-called "Baby Doe" language contained in this bill. In a sincere and bipartisan effort to deal with the horrible instances where treatment has been withheld to children born with severe handicaps—H.R. 1904 attempts to address the problem from several perspectives. First it expands the definition of child abuse to include those instances where medical treatment is withheld from severely handicapped infants because of their handicaps.

In addition the bill as reported requires HHS to determine the incidences of cases where medical care, nutrition or social services such as adoption services are withheld from infants born with severe life-threatening congenital handicaps. The bill directs HHS to promulgate guidelines after its study is completed that will encourage and assist States in establishing local health care review mechanisms such as boards or panels composed of health care professionals, representatives of disabled groups and those concerned with the rights of infants. These panels would both provide guidance to health care personnel and would review any decision to withhold treatment.

Finally the bill would condition future State child abuse funds on State implementation of procedures consistent with guidelines set forth by HHS in this area.

As a cosponsor of this legislation I felt that this language was critical to address this most serious of issues. I also consider it to be consistent with my longstanding support and advocacy for the "right to life." However it should be noted that in the ensuing months since this bill was reported by the committee to the House HHS has promulgated some final rules that encourage hospitals to establish infant care review committees to offer assistance and review decisions to withhold treatment. The rule also retains the requirement that hospitals post notices regarding the legal rights of handicapped infants in places where doctors and nurses will see them and establishes a national hotline to receive reports of withheld care but only gives doctors and nurses access to the toll free number. The rule also requires that State child protective service agencies have established procedures for applying their own State laws to the protection of children from medical neglect.

The issue we may have to confront today is whether these rules obviate the need for the retention of the "Baby Doe" language in this bill. I contend that these rules must be given an opportunity to be implemented and in that capacity it may be redundant to have the language in 1904 locked in for 4 years. The critical factor here is monitoring both by HHS and of course Congress over how we take steps to keep this abuse of children from proliferating. The rules were developed in response to H.R. 1904 as reported. This is unusual as usually the reverse occurs in this process. If we have the unique and beneficial situation where the implementation tool is in place even before the bill is passed that may be enough. The key is we must maintain our commitment to preserve the right to life wherever and whenever it is threatened.●

● Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the child abuse amendments. This legislation provides for continued Federal support for State and local activities designed to prevent family violence. If strengthening amendments are adopted, additional funds will be available for State grants for these purposes and for programs which seek to prevent and provide treatment for sexual abuse of children.

Domestic violence is a growing problem and is finally receiving the attention it warrants. Though it is not a new problem, there is greater awareness and consequently a tremendous increase in the number of domestic violence cases that are reported to authorities.

Domestic violence is not limited to child or spouse abuse, it can also include grandparents. The statistics are frightening.

Over the past 5 years, child neglect and abuse have increased by 106 percent. Over 652,000 children in the past year alone have been abused, neglected, or sexually exploited.

As many as 6 million wives are abused by their husbands each year. Some 2,000 to 4,000 annually are beaten to death.

Over 600,000 cases of senior citizen abuse are also reported each year.

The impact of this problem is staggering. Police, medical, and social services are strained to the limit. In fact, it is estimated that our Nation's police spend fully one-third of their time responding to domestic violence cases. Twenty percent of all police deaths and 40 percent of all injuries occur during responses to domestic violence complaints.

Initial medical diagnoses are estimated to cost over $100 million a year. Followup costs for medical treatment and psychological/psychiatric services are most likely much higher.

Abused children are 10 times more likely to need special education which in itself costs 3 to 7 times more than regular education. Child abuse is also the second leading cause of cerebral palsy according to the Cerebral Palsy Association.

Unfortunately, the increase in domestic violence is outpacing efforts to combat it. H.R. 1904 is a positive and substantive effort to deal with this problem.

Two important organizations will be given a new lease on life once this legislation is approved. One, the National Center on Child Abuse and Neglect collects and disseminates information concerning child abuse. The other is an advisory board on child abuse and neglect, which provides assistance to the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services in coordinating Federal programs dealing with these problems. Grants for research and technical assistance to public and private nonprofit agencies are also available, as is money for State programs to identify child abuse cases. Funding is also available for shelters and treatment services.

Funding will commence with $30 million for fiscal year 1984, increasing by 5 percent every year thereafter. Thirty percent of funding is for State grants and 5 percent for programs to prevent sexual abuse of children.

I also plan to support strengthening amendments which would increase the authorization for State grants to $65 million. The States are free to provide funding for a whole range of programs, including shelter, prevention, and treatment.

Domestic and family violence is not limited to any social, economic, or racial category. It can and does happen to the rich as well as the poor. It is increasing in South Dakota as it is nationwide. Though a number of initiatives at the State and local level are underway, especially in South Dakota, approval of this legislation will insure that the Federal commitment does not wane. A number of shelters and other services are operating in South Dakota that would benefit through passage of this legislation.

I encourage all Members to support both of these bills and all strengthening amendments.●

● Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983.

One of the greatest tragedies of our modern society is the growing number of cases of mistreatment of our young. As a former educator, I had an opportunity to witness firsthand the devastating effects of child abuse on its victims. Abused children either used school as an escape—plunging themselves into their studies to avoid thinking of what possibly awaited them when they went home—or, more often than not, would sit quietly at their desks, withdrawn and lost in their world of neglect and physical and verbal abuse. Most of these children could not benefit from the educational system. The opportunity to learn was lost to them. They were too emotionally destroyed. Their feeling of self-worth was almost nonexistent and they felt that they could not do anything right. How could they possibly master their studies successfully? Their whole self-image was poor.

Yet, this would not be the end of the suffering. Years later, these abused children, ill-equipped emotionally and lacking the skills necessary to succeed once they became adults would, in turn, abuse their own children and instill in them a feeling of worthlessness.

Mr. Chairman, although the passage of this legislation will not completely wipe out child abuse in our country, I can only hope that it can pave the way for future programs that can assist families to such an extent that it will put an end to the cycle of child abuse once and for all. We have too much at stake to permit the mistreatment of our children to continue.

I hope my colleagues will join me in voting for the passage of this bill.●

● Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, many of our colleagues have spoken in eloquent detail on H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act Amendments of 1983. Reauthorization of this bill is a much-needed step in the right direction.

However, the expanded definition of child abuse concerns me greatly. According to the revised act, the definition of child abuse includes cases where extraordinary life support measures are terminated for terminally handicapped infants.

Surely, the parents of an infant with terminal congenital impairments who have agonized over the painful decision to stop the prolonged agony of their child are not child abusers. The tragedy of these cases is only compounded by charging the parents, clergy, and medical professionals as child abusers while they are trying to deal with the agony of the right thing to do.

The Baby Doe provisions take the private decision of loving parents and their physician and place it in the hands of the Government—which will never know the child's circumstances.

The inclusion of these provisions could cause me to reconsider support of the bill. Therefore, I speak in favor of the amendment offered by Representative WAXMAN which would eliminate the Baby Doe language in H.R. 1904.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to speak in favor of the family violence prevention and services amendment. This amendment provides limited, matching aid to shelters and service programs which work with the victims of family violence.

Study after study has established the extent and severity of the problems of domestic violence. According to FBI reports, domestic violence results in 25 percent of all homicides, 40 percent of all police injuries, and 80 percent of violent juvenile and adult offenders. And even more startling, 1 out of every 6 couples in America experiences domestic violence.

The movement to provide shelters for battered wives and children, though in its infancy, has grown dramatically in the last few years. These initial efforts have taken root and have resulted in broad networks of community assistance services. Still, in many areas of the country, battered women and children have no alternatives to a dangerous home situation.

The following statistics show that domestic violence is still on the rise:

Nearly 6 million wives will be abused by their husbands in 1 year.

Some 2,000 to 4,000 women are beaten to death annually.

Battery is the single major cause of injury to women, more significant than auto accidents, rapes or muggings.

It is incumbent upon the Congress to make every effort to eliminate the barriers and prejudice that perpetuate this situation, and insure the continuance of programs that make available the necessary support and guidance.●

● Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Chairman, I would like to rise in support of an amendment which will be offered during the amending process by Mr. CHANDLER of Washington to the Child Abuse Prevention and Adoption Reform Act, H.R. 1904. At present, H.R. 1904, and the committee amendments that will be offered to it, require that "nutrition (including fluid maintenance), medically indicated treatment, general care, and appropriate social services are provided to infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments." Any decision not to provide such measures must be reported by the States as "child abuse." The Chandler amendment would strike the existing language and substitute language which would establish voluntary hospital committees which would provide advice on individual cases of severely impaired infants as well as recommend overall institutional policy on the issues involved.

It is absolutely appalling that any attempt be made to include the denial of life-prolonging medical procedures in the definition of child abuse. However one may feel about the right to die or the quality of life, it is preposterous to argue that a decision agonized over by parents in consultation with their physician and clergy be viewed as comparable to the beating or sexual molesting of a child. Such an inclusion questions the integrity of parents and clergy as well as physicians, nurses, and other health care professionals who staff neonatal intensive care units. While it is of vital importance that appropriate life-sustaining measures for all infants be secured, it must be recognized that despite the increasing advances in medical technology not all infants can be saved. Extraordinary life saving measures in these instances result in inappropriate and often painful treatment unnecessarily prolonging the dying process.

The present bill's language, if left to stand, presents an invasion of privacy at a time when parents are facing personal anguish and sorrow. It seeks to ignore the report, "Deciding to Forego Life-Sustaining Treatment" (March 1983), released by President's Commission for the Study of Ethical Problems in Medicine and Biomedical and Behavioral Research. This report concluded that decisions regarding medical treatment should not be legislated or regulated but should be carried out by parents in consultation with a health-care team.

The President's commission went on to recommend the establishment of hospital review committees to develop policies and procedures to provide advice to parents and health care professionals when the decision is made to withdraw or withhold medical treatment. The report also stated that hospital policies and procedures should insure that parents are provided with up-to-date information on the infant's medical condition to assist in the decisionmaking process. The establishment of hospital review committees, with rules promulgated by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, as suggested by the President's commission, is exactly what the Chandler amendment seeks to initiate.

Given the complexity and emotional significance attached to this legislation, I feel that this Chandler compromise is a more responsible effort than the committee's language. I hope you will consider the implications of allowing Federal bureaucrats to reject decisions arrived at by parents during consultation with their doctors and clergy. The transfer of decisionmaking regarding medical treatment of the infant from the medical team to Federal bureaucrats must not be allowed. After considering these implications, please join me in supporting Mr. CHANDLER's amendment.

● Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to rise in support of an amendment which will be offered by Mr. CHANDLER to the Child Abuse Prevention and Adoption Reform Act, H.R.

1904. At present, H.R. 1904 and the committee amendments that will be offered to it, require that:

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, as we consider H.R. 1904, the child abuse amendments, I urge my colleagues to reflect upon the importance of families. Families are the foundation on which our society is built.

Yet, behind closed doors, many families are being torn apart by violence. Although the statistics are relatively few, the picture is startlingly clear—family violence is a very serious problem.

Family violence does not exempt race, class, or region. In my home State of Wisconsin, an estimated 75,000 cases of wife abuse occurred in 1982, affecting poor, rich, and middle-class families, and urban and rural families. Plainly, family violence affects us all. It is more than a shame—it is a crime.

In light of the tragic facts, a real solution is necessary. Congress must take a leading role in effectively solving family violence, because of the crime's complexities and its short- and long-term dangers. Action must be prompt. Family violence is a time bomb, because children raised in violent homes often become abusers and violent criminals in the next generation.

I support funding for the treatment and prevention of family violence. Immediate attention is, of course, crucial to the life and limb of the hapless victims. Community-based shelters, which offer prompt relief and assistance to battered wives and children, have created a safety net for wives who previously would have been afraid to seek help.

The spotlight must be on the prevention of family violence, too. The link between present and future violence must be broken, with the help from counseling, alcohol and drug abuse treatment, and self-help services to both the abuser and the victim. Religious, charitable, voluntary, and other nonprofit organizations are invaluable resources in making sure that family violence does not recur at all.

The family violence prevention and services amendment is an excellent and very timely opportunity to bolster State, local, and private resources in the treatment and prevention of the tragedy called family violence. I urge its swift approval.●

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on title I and all amendments thereto close at 2 o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

□ 1300

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do so only to inquire whether that time limit would exclude any period of time in which the House is voting on any proposition that may be before us, and this would only be debate time.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, it would be my intention to exclude from that 1 hour any time consumed in actual voting.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would advise that if there were voting at the end of the time, time would still be expired.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I am willing to extend that time to an hour and a half, to 2:30, if that will alleviate the problem.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate time only, excluding any time for voting on title I and all amendments thereto, be closed in 1 hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise that if time is limited to a time certain, then voting time is included.

If the gentleman wishes, and of course it is up to him, he can say that debate shall continue to a specified hour.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I just reworded my unanimous-consent request to state again that I ask unanimous consent that debate only on title I and all amendments thereto be closed in 1 hour, excluding from that any time consumed in voting.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY)?

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would just ask the gentleman who is making the request as to whether he knows how many amendments are anticipated. I have one amendment. I would just like to make sure that I have the opportunity to offer that, and not being a member of the committee, since I would not be recognized first but, rather, last, I would like to preserve my right. Is there some assurance on that?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I appreciate the gentleman's concern. I have viewed his amendment. I was looking for him before we started general debate to let him know that I agree with his amendment and would be happy to join him in the presentation of that amendment. So he will not be excluded from offering it, not being a member of the committee.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURPHY. I thank the Chair, and I thank my colleagues. I think we can now conclude this matter this afternoon, as we intended.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. MURPHY

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments and ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read.

Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The amendments are as follows:

Page 10, line 16, strike out "(d)," and insert in lieu thereof "(c)".

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, the bipartisan amendments that have been very long and carefully drafted by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ERLENBORN) and myself and our very able staffs bring the bill in line to complement the HHS regulations that were recently adopted, clarifies the bill's language, eliminates a study that we believe is unnecessary, and provides additional assistance to families and doctors. This package of technical amendments:

Complements the HHS regulations by providing statutory language which conforms with requirements mandated for State child protection agencies.

Clarifies language in the bill so that infant care review committees are an option States may chose in addressing this matter on a local level. States may utilize existing policies rather than create another agency or bureaucracy.

Eliminates the study of the number of incidents and cases of infants born at risk because we believe these studies are already being conducted, many of them having been concluded.

Creates a directory of physicians, on a regional basis, being prepared by HHS, who have an expertise in the treatment of handicapped infants, that other physicians may call and receive referrals. Health care providers may consult these experts and avoid a disruption in the care of the infants. We also rely upon regional support.

And creates a directory of the resources and State agencies available to assist families and parents in the care of handicapped infants so that they may make the proper choice.

I urge the adoption of this package.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendments. As I said in general debate, I want to compliment the gentleman from Pennsylvania and, as well, the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) for the many hours of efforts put in by them personally and also by their respective staffs in meeting with the interested parties. It was very difficult and time consuming. Many meetings were held, some of those in my office.

I think we had a very good dialog, many good suggestions, and the amendments now being offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr.

MURPHY) incorporate some of those suggestions.

As I also said in general debate, I do not want to give the impression that all controversy about the bill has been removed or that all of the parties have been satisfied. I think we have moved ahead very carefully, and I hope that the amendments will be adopted.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. CHANDLER AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. MURPHY

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments as a substitute for the amendments.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order.

I have not been advised there is a substitute. May I ask the gentleman from Washington: Are these his amendments or a substitute for our amendments?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, these are substitutes for the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. They had been commonly known as the Waxman amendments until today.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the substitute amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. CHANDLER as a substitute for the amendments offered by Mr. MURPHY: Page 4, strike out line 10 and all that follows through "(c)" in line 15 on page 5 and insert in lieu thereof "SEC. 103. (a)".

(d) The Secretary shall arrange with the Institute of Medicine of the National Academy of Sciences to conduct the study prescribed by subsection (a). Under the arrangement the actual expenses incurred by the Institute in conducting such study will be paid by the Secretary.

Mr. WAXMAN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Chandler amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I certainly want to point out that it is not out of any disrespect for the chairman or the ranking member of the committee that I offer this amendment.

I also want to reemphasize, as I did during general debate, that what we are talking about here is a question of a decisionmaking process. There is no one in the House of Representatives who is indifferent to the welfare of infants. I might point out that this amendment has very broad philosophical support. Included as cosponsors or supporters are the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. QUILLEN), the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ROWLAND), and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL).

This is also not a debate on a right to life or any other related issue.

It is also not a debate on section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act.

This amendment that I propose affects only this legislation and does not impact the recent HHS regulations. Those remain in effect.

What this amendment does is, it requires the Secretary of HHS to establish model procedures to provide guidance to local health-care facilities desiring to establish review committees which would advise parents in decisions concerning severely ill newborns. It also requires HHS to establish in each regional office a directory of physicians having expertise in the treatment of infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments.

Third, it establishes an independent commission to study the broad range of issues involved.

Why would we do this in the form of a substitute? Why do we do this in the form of an amendment?

As proposed, the Murphy-Erlenborn amendment encourages the Government, I believe, to second-guess parental decisions regarding what is the best medical treatment for their child, even when that is not indicated.

It places an impossible burden, I believe, on the States to insure that medically indicated treatment and appropriate social services are provided to infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments. How can States, certainly 50 of them, in any uniform way ever meet such an absolute requirement?

The problem is even more difficult on the States, parents, and hospitals because this bill uses terms that are impossible to define in this context, such as "medically indicated treatment" and "appropriate social services."

The issue is extremely complex, with enormous impact, yet there has been no real study by the House. In fact, proposed legislation flies in the face of the President's Commission on Bioethics which studied the problem and, as I indicated earlier, recommended that the Government stay out of this process.

Today I am offering an amendment which I believe allows Congress to act positively to assist infants, their families, and physicians in a most emotional and troubling time rather than requiring States and the Federal Government to second-guess every parental decision regarding medical treatment.

Mr. Chairman, I urge its adoption.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendments.

Mr. Chairman, let me say at the outset that in no way do I criticize nor derogate the sensitivity and compassion of the Members who are offering and supporting this amendment. This is a controversial area, but I want to express a few thoughts that I hope Members will bear in mind when they evaluate whether or not Mr. MURPHY's and Mr. ERLENBORN's minimal, I might say, and reasonably consensus-determined protections for the preborn can be accepted as a part of this child abuse legislation.

My friend, the gentleman from the State of Washington, just said that Murphy-Erlenborn second-guesses parental decisions. Well, is it not odd that when it comes to the subject of a teenage girl seeking an abortion, the law insists on keeping the parents out of that decision? And I dare say the same Members who support this well-intentioned but flawed amendment also want to keep the parents out of the decision as to whether a young girl shall get an abortion or not; that they will insist, is none of the parents' business.

So, on the one hand, we want maximum parental decisional authority over an infants life or death, but on the other hand, we keep the parents out of the abortion decision—a strange anomaly. I do not use the word "hypocrisy"; I use the word, "anomaly." But that is what it is.

Now, governmental intervention: Nobody likes the Government sticking its nose into private decisions, but I suggest that there is something more important here than a parent deciding whether Junior gets the car tonight. We are talking about this human person—not animal, not vegetable, not mineral, not a tumor, not an exhibit on a slide under a microscope, but a born person. Oh, yes, not perfect, not planned, not privileged, but handicapped and maybe does not measure up to the physical or mental standards that are set by some committee implementing the quality-of-life ethic, but, nonetheless, human, defective, crippled, handicapped, less than perfect, a born person. So all the semantic evasions about not being a person, not being yet born, not being human life, we cannot really use those. We have got a human being here.

So the question really is, Does the Constitution apply to that person, the Constitution which says that no person shall be deprived of life without due process of law nor deprived of equal protection of the law?

You would not starve a yellow dog in your basement to death without the cruelty society prosecuting you. But that is what they did in Bloomington with the imprimatur of the courts—the courts—which are set up to enforce the law, the law which is designed to protect the weak from the strong. That is all it does. All those law books, all they do is protect the weak from the strong.

Now, I am for parental authority. I wish we had more parental authority. I wish the schools stood in locus parents. But parents are not infallible, and they may have a serious problem in having to raise a child that presents a terrible burden. It takes heroism to save a life, and it may take extensive, prolonged heroism to take care of a handicapped child.

That is not the question. Society owes those parents and children help and support and ought to help and support them. But the question is: Is that little, defenseless, vulnerable child that cannot escape, that cannot vote, that cannot rise up in the streets, entitled to equal protection of the law, entitled to be treated equally well with a dog or with a cat or with an animal?

Now, that really is the question. The quality of life? Let me tell the Members about the Bloomington baby. It was not just that the baby had Downs syndrome and maybe would not have been able to attain a high IQ—maybe. You can learn a lot from a Downs syndrome child, as you know. They do not know much about greed or selfishness. They can teach us about love. But there were families that wanted to adopt that child. That is the tragedy. They say, "If the parents can't carry that burden, give us your child. We will do it. We have an excess of love for the child."

Now, the baby died. That is as tragic an event as ever happened in this century. Stalin said, "One death is a tragedy. A million deaths are statistics." But I suggest to the Members we should give this minimal protection to this little unwanted child. Somebody may want that child.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the Members to think very carefully and, with compassion, reject the Chandler amendment.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute amendments.

First of all, Mr. Chairman, let me say that my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois, is a hard act to follow, but I agree with everything that he said.

Let me also suggest that no one yet has questioned the right of the authorities, under the Rehabilitation Act, under the Child Abuse Act, or under State statutes, to review decisions that parents make about handicapped children who are not new-born infants. There have been many cases on the question of whether the parents are making the proper decision about providing food, nutrition, fluid, maintenance, or the medically indicated treatment for a victim of an auto accident or a skiing accident, whatever it might be. The authorities have the right to review that decision, and if the parents are not giving, with that decision, proper treatment and maintenance for that child, the authorities may step in to see that the child gets proper treatment and maintenance.

How is it any different for the newborn? An unspoken assumption by those who have been opposing this effort is that somehow or other the newborn is not quite fully human. The law unfortunately, in my opinion, now says the pre-born, the fetus, is not human and is, therefore, not entitled to the full protection of the Constitution.

Should we go that next step now by adopting this amendment that has the philosophy behind it that the newborn also is not quite human? Should we adopt the arguments that are being made that the quality of the life of that newborn may be a factor or the principal factor that is utilized in determining whether that child has an opportunity to live or shall die because the death has been procured by withholding medical treatment, food, and fluid maintenance?

I submit that if we do allow public policy to go that next step to deny the humanness of the newborn and to adopt the quality-of-life argument, it can then be extended even further.

How about at the other end of life? Not the newborn but one whose useful life appears to have come to an end, one who is senile, who really has little or no opportunity for what some would call a good quality of life. Will we then in the next step say, "Well, yes, we can also make those life or death decisions for these people because, having become senile, they are not quite human, either"?

Mr. Chairman, I do not think we are going to do that, and I think it is the obligation of this Congress to establish public policy clearly by the rejection of this amendment and the adoption of the Murphy amendment and the passage of this bill, and not rely merely upon regulations that are transitory at best and can be changed without elected officials such as ourselves in this body making that decision.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be rejected and the Murphy amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I certainly want to correct one statement, that the philosophy of this legislation, this amendment, is not that those who proposed it believe that there is anything less human about handicapped infants. That is the furthest thing from our minds.

We find ourselves, I think, in a society with the tragedy of facing the decision in the first place. It was so much simpler then when technology did not make life maintenance as possible as it is today.

So now we face the question and as a rational, caring, human society, we have to come to a conclusion about it; so you face then a situation where very often you are not absolutely sure, where well-meaning people, where professionals and clergy will disagree as to the course of treatment to follow, whether there should be any treatment at all, whether it should be limited or whether it should be unlimited in an attempt to sustain life. That is the question.

So that being the case then, who is it that is best equipped to make the decision? I am a conservative on this point. I think it rests with the individual. That is what Thomas Jefferson talked about. That is why we have tolerance on this podium in front here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. HYDE, and by unanimous consent, Mr. ERLENBORN was allowed to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.)

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, we understand in this country that for people to experience and to have freedom, it is to make decisions for themselves, and in this case for their loved ones.

Now, if in a case where there is the obvious abuse of the right of the child, of course the Constitution protects that child. It does now.

I suspect that under any proposal that we could bring out, that there will be mistakes made. I think the judgment of the Government of the United States or the State of Washington or the State of Illinois could be just as faulty as the judgment of JOHN ERLENBORN. That is just the way life is; but I would rather give you the decision than to take it away from you and put it in the hands of some bureaucrat.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Let me suggest to the gentleman that I reject the concept that the argument is what type of medical treatment should be afforded to the handicapped infant, the newborn. That is not the argument.

All we are saying here is medically indicated treatment. That is a medical decision. That is not a decision that I am going to make or the gentleman is going to make or the courts would make, unless there is a medical controversy.

The question is, Will the same medical treatment be given the handicapped as the nonhandicapped? That is what this whole argument is about. Do the handicapped have the same rights to honest medical decisions as the nonhandicapped?

The question is, Are we going to allow quality of life arguments, saying that this handicapped child has lesser rights to that medically indicated treatment?

We are not going to second-guess the medical profession. I know that is their fear, but we are talking about handicapped versus nonhandicapped. That is all we are addressing here.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Illinois, and if I have time, I will then yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has stated the question precisely. The Government is not going to be telling the doctor nor the parents what type of treatment over some other type of treatment they should receive; but the fact is that there are many children that are permitted to die because minimal routine medical care is withheld from them and the parents who have the emotional trauma of being confronted with this horrendous decision and seeing ahead a bleak prospect may well not be at that time and in that place the best people to decide; but I suggest to you if that child were black, you could not withhold medical reasonable, ordinary—not heroic, not all kinds of expensive machines, although I suggest that the dialysis machine is very costly and we use it on anybody that needs it; but I suggest that a question of life or death for a born person ought to belong to nobody, whether they are parents or not. The Constitution ought to protect that child.

All that the Erlenborn-Murphy legislation does is make that decision open to people who do not have and are not confronted with the emotional trauma nor with having to face the burden; but the individual has to be protected and get equal protection of the law.

Because they are handicapped, they are not to be treated differently than if they were a woman or a Hispanic or an American Indian or black. They are handicapped. That is a mental condition or a physical condition; but by God, they are human, and nobody has the right to kill them by passive starvation or anything else.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

I promised to yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER).

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, if I may have the attention of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), let me just ask something. The debate so far has been in the context of the handicapped and in the case of the Bloomington baby, which had Downes Syndrome, a generally recognized "handicap." But when we talk about medically indicated treatment, and this is one thing that troubled me in drafting this amendment to try to improve the language in the original bill, I assume we are also talking about—I do not want to use the word handicapped, but a medical condition, if you will. We know there are babies born with the brain outside the skull. There are babies that are born with their intestines outside. There are unbelievable conditions which newborn babies are saddled with.

We visited the Jackson Memorial Hospital in Miami, and we saw a number of these babies where it would just be a soul-wrenching decision for the parents who expected so much.

I am just trying to determine whether we are not placing limits on medical judgments about medical treatment for a child whom we would not consider as having recognized handicaps, but medical conditions that are far beyond our lay persons ability to comprehend.

As the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ERLENBORN) started to point out, we are not dictating or trying to dictate the medical treatment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. ERLENBORN was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I would assume it would be the intent of the amendment, as I sat in the discussions, to continue to allow the doctors and the parents to make determinations that the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) talked about, the heroic determinations of turning loose on their child all the extra special things that we can do in medical practice today.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman, let me say that the gentleman is right. It is our intention here not to specify what kind of treatment should be rendered, except that it be the same treatment that would be rendered to a nonhandicapped person, that there should not be discrimination based upon the handicapped condition.

As the gentleman knows, in the amendment pending that the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY) has offered, there is the adoption of the voluntary medical review panel in the health care institutions. I think this is going to eliminate, if not entirely, most of the controversy, because instead of letting the one family doctor and the parents make the decision, here in those institutions that will avail themselves of the opportunity of using the medical review panel, they will have the panel to determine what is the medically indicated treatment.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further on that point?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. After that decision is made, and let us assume that it is a decision that we all agree with, is that doctor or those parents, that priest, are they now liable for child abuse? That is what concerns me. If somebody disagrees with that decision and an interested party now brings a lawsuit and files charges against these parents who have gone through these decisions, would they be liable for child abuse?

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman that I do not think anyone contemplates that they would be charged with child abuse. I cannot envision any circumstance where they would, unless they took an absolutely arbitrary attitude that was demonstrably meant to take a life when the life could have been and should have been saved. No one is going to do that. That just is not going to happen.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must say that I would disagree with that assurance that the gentleman has given us. After all, we have that situation in New York where the parents have been faced with this horrible tragedy trying to make their decision. They have consulted with the medical people. They have consulted with their consciences. They may well have consulted with the clergy as well. If somebody did not agree with their decision, when someone did not agree with their decision, they brought them into court and asked that the parents be removed from responsibility.

I believe under this bill, to answer the question of the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) that if someone disagrees with a conclusion that was reached, that the parents may well find themselves accused of child abuse under the provisions of this law. I would not accept those assurances if someone disagrees with the parents.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Let me just say, Mr. Chairman, I think that is a red herring.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ERLENBORN) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. MILLER of California and by unanimous consent, Mr. ERLENBORN was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ERLENBORN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER of California. I do not think it is quite a red herring. I think it is a legitimate concern.

We are talking about discrimination against the handicapped and, as I understand it, the HHS regulations were filed based upon 504, which protects individuals against discrimination on the basis of handicap where Federal services and dollars are involved.

Now we are talking about putting it into the child abuse bill. I guess my concern is that this language asks for expectations that none of us really believe can be fulfilled because even though all parties do agree, if we were to get an agreement among any 5 or 20 of us, or everybody here on the floor, somebody can still come in and people can find themselves, loving parents, caring doctors, the family's religious adviser, friends themselves, hauled in for child abuse.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Let me say I do believe this is a red herring. There are no criminal sanctions in this bill.

Child abuse laws are State laws. We already have medical review panels that have been voluntarily adopted by health care institutions.

This bill in no way changes the definition of child abuse, in no way amends the laws of the States, in no way puts these doctors and health care professionals in any more jeopardy than they are today, and it is absolutely a red herring argument to haul this out and say that somehow or other if this bill passes we are going to be putting at risk the medical profession in some way they were not before.

Mr. MILLER of California. Let me just ask you, what would the State's attorney charge somebody with who violated the provisions of the statute? It is under the Child Abuse Act.

Mr. ERLENBORN. There are no criminal sanctions in this bill. He will charge them with nothing.

This is preventative. There are no criminal sanctions.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in support of the Chandler amendment.

Mr. Chairman, let us understand at the outset what this debate and this amendment are not about. This amendment is not about the controversial regulations that have been much publicized at the Department of Health and Human Services that various medical and hospital and disability groups have been working on. Those regulations are based on a completely different statute. Those regulations are based on the Rehabilitation Act and make provisions that affect another section of the law.

I do not mean to support or oppose regulations at this time. They will stand or fall on their own merits, but they are not before this House today.

The Chandler amendment is also not an attempt to address the complicated issues of section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act. As you will note, H.R. 1904 contains clear language saying that this bill is not to be used to limit any protection of that act.

The Chandler amendment does not amend that portion of H.R. 1904 and would not affect the legal status of section 504 in any way.

It simply says that in this bill which deals with child abuse money to go to the States we should not impose a whole new set of regulations on the States which will be confusing to the hospitals and to the patients.

Why do we need this bill? This bill says that if the State does not adopt its own set of regulations, and does not ask the hospital to abide by the State regulations in addition to the Federal regulations, the State will lose the money to carry out its child abuse programs. That is the sanction under this bill. We are going to punish a State by holding back their child abuse funds so they cannot do any work to deal with the child abuse problems.

The Chandler amendment to the amendment would instead provide guidelines for local hospitals to create local review committees. This approach is patterned after the recommendations of the President's Commission on Biomedical Ethics.

I do not believe it is appropriate or necessary for the Federal Government to intrude in these tragic cases at all. Decisions concerning medical treatment of severely handicapped newborns should be left to those most involved: the parents, their doctors, and their clergy.

But since the HHS regulations have been promulgated, it is particularly inappropriate for us now to adopt additional statutory language to deal with Infant Doe and its family.

However you may feel about the final regulations, you should not support another set of laws, regulation upon regulation. This can only serve to confuse hospital, doctor, nurse, and parent about which rule to follow and which procedure is required not in the interest of the child, but in the interest of Federal and State bureaucracies.

Because of this confusion, all medical groups—the AMA, the American Hospital Association, even many groups that have supported the Department's regulations—oppose the language of this bill.

Parents should have sufficient medical information to understand their choice. The Chandler amendment provides for the creation of a directory of health care providers with the best expertise in treating handicapped infants.

What it does not and should not provide are committees of bureaucrats and teams of lawyers to second-guess and overrule the informed decisions of parents and doctors and clergy. Families alone will know the grief of dying children. With all available support, families alone should be left to make the decisions about treating their children.

For those who think that Government should not be involved in our lives, I ask you to step back and look at what is being accomplished. The Department is looking at setting up a Federal regulatory scheme to deal with intruding, I believe, in the right of the parents to get information to make a decision as to their newborn baby.

Now, this bill would have us set a whole new set under the State auspices, regulation on top of regulation.

If we pass this bill and define that as child abuse, we could withhold money from the State. We can bring people into court and say they are guilty of child abuse.

What have we accomplished then? Nothing other than trying to say again and again and again how we feel very concerned about newborns.

The Federal child abuse statute is a most inappropriate forum for discussing these heartrending decisions. However much reasonable people may differ about the right to die or the importance of the quality of life, no one can argue that a decision by parents, doctors, and clergymen is the same as beating or sexually molesting a child.

The remedy for noncompliance with this section would, indeed, only make the problems of real child abuse far worse. If one hospital disagrees with HHS on the appropriate treatment for a child and the State does not enforce the HHS judgment, the entire State would be ineligible for child abuse funds.

I ask you, who suffers if child abuse money is withdrawn? Not hospital administrators. Not physicians. Not even the family of Baby Doe. The victims of H.R. 1904's remedy are all the abused and molested children of a State.

Finally, I believe that the bill and the committee amendment are badly drafted in attempting to reach any reasonable or humanitarian interest. The terms "necessary medical treatment," "general care," and even "ensure"—all are vague and unclear. Physicians and parents attempting to follow such directives will be forced to prolong even those severe cases that everyone would agree are only hopeless pain. Ironically, avoiding this hopeless pain would make professionals and families run the risk of being labeled—and even prosecuted—as "child abusers."

For these and other reasons, I urge my colleagues to support the Chandler amendment. This body is unprepared to decide each Baby Doe case this afternoon. Even if it were scientifically and professionally trained, it would not have the moral right to force its own decisions into thoughtful and painful family judgments.

The American Medical Association, the American Hospital Association, the Federation of American Hospitals, the American Academy of Pediatrics, the Association of American Medical Colleges, the American College of Obstetrics and Gynecologists, the American Academy of Family Physicians, the National Association of Children's Hospitals, and related institutions all support the Chandler amendment.

I would urge that we agree to the Chandler amendment and go forward and renew the authorizations for the child abuse program.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in support of the substitute.

I am a cosponsor of the substitutes offered by the gentleman from California and the gentleman from the State of Washington.

I think the debate today demonstrates we have a sober realization that this very sensitive matter directly affects families in a most personal and immediate way. I hope none of us will ever be faced with making a decision about the medical care to be given to a newborn baby with life-threatening impairment. Yet some people will be faced with such decisions.

The question here is, who will make that decision: The loving parents in consultation with trusted doctors and clergy, or Government bureaucrats? That is the question. Let no one say otherwise.

This substitute leaves the decision with parents, and in my opinion, they probably need our prayers far more than they need laws and regulations.

I have given this matter a great deal of thought, as I said, and have consulted with a number of people with experience in this most difficult of human situations.

At length, I have concluded that the role of Government advocated by some has no appropriate place in these decisions.

The new HHS rule issued in early January, after months of discussion with medical and disability groups, is based on the Vocational Rehabilitation Act. These new regulations, which the administration has said are adequate, are by no means the same as what is in this bill or in the Murphy-Erlenborn amendment. Those provisions are based on the child abuse laws.

The new HHS rule is an improvement over the original regulation of last year, definitely an improvement. It encourages the establishment of local hospital review committees and reduces the earlier emphasis on direct Government intervention.

I fear the implications of inviting bureaucrats to make review-and-reject decisions that loving parents have made with their doctors and clergy. Government cannot provide a uniform answer to these most intimate and personal tragedies. Government cannot do this and must not be allowed to try. Each case is unique and can be decided only by those intimately involved.

Our substitute provides the right approach and is more in tune with the new HHS regulations.

The substitute will require HHS to establish guidelines to assist hospitals and doctors who deal with severely impaired newborn infants. These guidelines would include procedures for local hospital review committees to provide professional advice on individual cases and to recommend overall institutional policy.

The substitute is patterned on the formal recommendations of the President's Commission on Biomedical Ethics. It requires HHS to establish a national commission to study the medical and ethical issues involved in the care of infants with severe birth defects. Finally, the substitute requires HHS regional offices to establish and maintain a directory of physicians having expertise in the care and treatment of infants with severe birth defects. These doctors can also act as consultants in cases involving severely handicapped infants.

Mr. Chairman, in these most difficult situations, I believe the inevitable agony will be less if these decisions are left with the families involved. The parents will decide, after consultation with medical professionals and clergy, on the basis of love. In any event, it is the family that must live with the decision and the Government bureaucrats must not be involved.

I have heard fine statements from the gentleman from Illinois, from both gentlemen from Illinois. They share the same concern about human life as I share. My point is this, that I do not want the bureaucrats from Washington or a regional level to prescribe treatment over the objections of the parents, the doctors, and clergy involved.

We all agree that newborns should have every opportunity to grow up in a society of freedom and have the same rights that we all have. That is not the issue here.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman (Mr. QUILLEN) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. QUILLEN was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. QUILLEN. The newborn, if he or she is suffering to the point of death and they have to call the regional office or call Washington, D.C., and say, "Get a man on a plane down here to this hospital and tell us what we should do," and in the meantime this infant, this severely handicapped individual, could die before the bureaucrats can act. Is this the next step?

I think it is a mistake that we would have legislation to direct us in that vein. I do not say that the sponsors of the Murphy-Erlenborn amendment have that in mind, but they are opening the door for the bureaucrats to take over and we must stop that approach dead in its tracks.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUILLEN. I will be happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, let me say the gentleman is extremely eloquent. As he describes it, I thoroughly agree with him and I would vote against such a bill. The only trouble is he is not describing our bill.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Chairman, I am describing my substitute and the gentleman's (Mr. ERLENBORN) amendment. I think if we look at a letter from the Association of American Medical Colleges signed by Dr. John A. Cooper, and dated February 1, we will see that they are strongly opposed to the Murphy-Erlenborn amendment. Let me read:

ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN MEDICAL COLLEGES,
Washington, D.C., February 1, 1984.

Hon. JAMES H. QUILLEN,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. QUILLEN: The Association of American Medical Colleges (AAMC) is opposed to one provision in the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Reauthorization Act (H.R. 1904) now being considered by the House. As stated in the letter sent to all members of Congress on November 4, 1983 by nine major organizations representing medical care, including the AAMC, we have grave misgivings about the section of this bill that would interject the Federal Government and state child abuse protective agencies into the decisions about medical treatment that parents must make when their child is born with life-threatening or other severe medical problems. The bill proposes that they would be subject to criminal action if their difficult decisions are at variance with the views of the government.

Most severely ill infants are cared for by the clinical faculty of the medical schools in affiliated teaching hospitals. Research carried on in these institutions has developed medical treatment and new procedures which make it possible for babies with formerly fatal conditions to live productive lives. We will continue to develop ways to improve the medical care for these unfortunate infants and are certain that by pushing back the boundaries of biomedical knowledge more of them can be saved to contribute to society.

The bill reported by the Committee on Education and Labor includes a provision, offered by Mr. Erlenborn, that would label some medical treatment decided upon by parents, in consultation with their physician, to be child abuse. It also includes a requirement for a "hot line" that could summon investigators from state and federal agencies that would add to the distress of already distraught parents. From past experience, we know that these investigations bring disruption of hospital care to all infants. The requirements imposed by the legislation would also so overwhelm child abuse agencies that they could not adequately carry out their other responsibilities to prevent real child abuse.

The Association enthusiastically supports the amendment that you, Mr. Chandler and Mr. Waxman have introduced. It provides a more rational approach by encouraging the voluntary development of review boards by hospitals made up of medical and ethical experts and members of the community who can provide advice to parents, physicians, and other health care personnel about the treatment of severely ill infants. Your amendment would preserve the rights of parents to make rational decisions and the important and long-standing relationship between physicians, their patients, and the patients' parents.

Sincerely,

JOHN A. D. COOPER, M.D.

I think if we take advice from the professionals, the doctors involved, that we will see that the Government has no place in this society in the role proposed for Murphy-Erlenborn. I urge the adoption of the substitute and the defeat of the Murphy-Erlenborn amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to advise the Members that there are 20 minutes remaining under the time limitation, and that there are three amendments pending at the desk.

Mr. ROWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak to the amendment from the perspective of one who has been involved in making these decisions before with families, and we are not talking about whether or not this newborn handicapped is fully a human being or not. I have never been a member of a hospital staff that we did not have a committee that would address this particular problem. I have been involved with parents in the utter depravity of this situation, a situation where there has been abject hopelessness, a situation where the parents already find almost insurmountable the decision to be made. I believe that in this particular legislation we will see the focus possibly taken away from the family and the doctor and the clergy and maybe put into the courts.

We are having increasing difficulty now with the new and highly sophisticated life support systems that we have, in making the decision about what to do with badly handicapped newborn children. To not recognize the part that the family has to play in this decision, and may possibly be removed from them, is unconscionable, I believe, on our part.

I think that doctors will feel in jeopardy. Many doctors now feel in jeopardy with people who are severely handicapped, possibly because of brain death and are being kept alive on extraordinary life support systems, they are fearful of what might take place and being brought into court. I see exactly the same thing happening under this particular situation.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Ms. FERRARO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in support of the amendment, the Chandler amendment.

I must say that this was one set of circumstances that gave me a good deal of thought. I was not quite sure how I was going to come down on this issue, having worked in the DA's office with so many child abuse and child abuse homicide cases. I really was not sure what I was going to do, but I must tell you that I have done a lot of study on the subject. I do not think it is overstating the case to say that this is likely to be the most intensely personal and gut-wrenching legislation we will deal with this year. It is absolutely impossible not to have a strong emotional reaction to the "Baby Doe" situations which have arisen. The committee report on this bill says, and I quote:

It is the intent of the Committee to save the life to any at-risk infant (whether or not family members agree with the judgment of the attending physician) when the attending physician deems it medically reasonable to do so.

I do not think there is any Member of this body who would not be able to understand the motivation of the committee in that statement. I certainly understand it. Extending help to a baby in trouble is a most natural and human instinct.

But there is much more to this issue. Are we really prepared to say we will substitute our judgment or that of a community review board in these tragically personal, terribly painful situations for those of the parents? Are we really going to add to the grief and torment of a young couple, whose hopes and prayers for a healthy baby have been shattered, the burden of complying with that ill-advised intrusion of Federal law? To my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who are concerned about excessive Government regulation of peoples' private lives let me say this: The issue here is not whether as a government we have an affirmative responsibility to our children. We do. We have a responsibility to provide for and to nurture and to protect them. And that responsibility extends to stopping the activities of an abusive parent. We do not believe the law stops where the family begins. But surely we can draw a distinction between a law which restrains a parent guilty of physical and verbal abuse against a child and a law which subjects a family in the midst of a private ordeal to a public inquest.

There is a case in New York which has recently attracted considerable media attention and which has been the subject of considerable legal and political maneuvering.

On Long Island, a baby girl was born with severe handicaps. She had spina bifida, hydrocephalus, and microcephaly, which means that she had a hole in her spine, she had water on the brain, it was an enlarged brain.

The doctors prognosis was that with surgery, the infant might live to be 20 years old, while with alternative treatment she would live only 2 years.

The doctors also said, however, that the surgery would leave her severely retarded, paralyzed from the waist down, and subject to persistent and painful infections of the bladder and kidneys. And they told the parents her only awareness of the world would be her pain.

After consulting with the doctors, their clergyman, and social workers, and their own soul-searching, these young parents of this first-born child, the parents chose not to have the surgery performed. Few if any of us in this Chamber can know the pain and difficulty of that decision.

Since they made that decision, they have been hounded and harassed through the legal system of New York State by a private attorney with no connection or relationship to the family, and the Reagan Justice Department. They have been forced to defend their decision through three levels of State courts. And I spoke in a great deal of detail with two of the appellate division judges who decided the case and a Federal district court where the attorney was finally fined $500 for harassment.

The Justice Department has appealed the Federal district court's ruling supporting the parents' decision to withhold treatment.

All these endless legal proceedings only serve to add to the emotional burden of those parents, not to mention adding a financial drain on their resources.

The question is not what is the right decision. God knows there can be no right decision. The most we can hope for, as happened in the Long Island case, is that the decision is knowingly made by loving parents with the best interests of their children—and I repeat, their child—at heart. These parents consulted with doctors, clergy, and social workers, and then decided on a conservative course of treatment rather than extraordinary procedures.

I think that is the best we can hope for under these tragic circumstances. Our goal should be to provide support for the parents, not to compound their grief by forcing them to submit to the will of strangers.

It is argued that not all parents will have the best interests of their baby at heart. And the response: let me quote for the Members from an editorial from the largest Catholic newspaper in New York. It is called the Tablet.

Ideally, the decision over ordinary and extraordinary means is made by the physician and the patient. Where the patient is incompetent, it is a decision for family and physician. The physician, with consultation, determines the prudent limits of ordinary procedures. The family must decide about the use and extent of extraordinary means.

The possibility, even the inevitability, that there will be some abuse of such procedures should not enter the debate. Perhaps there are coldly irresponsible parents seeking only their convenience. Perhaps venal doctors will violate the sacred oath of their profession. We should pray for them, not make them the norm for public policy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. FERRARO) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Ms. FERRARO was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Ms. FERRARO. The Surgeon General of the United States, showing a complete lack of faith in the parents of America, has warned that failure to adopt Baby Doe rules will lead to massive euthanasia. I believe that view is utterly without basis in either public opinion or medical practice, but is, in fact, based on an ideological view, and an extreme one.

In discussing the Long Island case, Surgeon General said:

We are not just fighting for this baby. We are fighting for the principle that every life is individually and uniquely sacred.

Let us not decide this question on the basis of abstract expressions of ideology. Let us support the individual parents, who are the people who must deal not in abstracts, but with the baby they know and love.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the substitute.

Apparently there is a great deal of misunderstanding and misinformation being given about the bill and the committee amendments.

We recognize in the measure and in the committee amendments that the physician's judgment is the sole basis to treat or to withhold treatment. All infants, unfortunately, do not survive. And we place no restrictions upon doctors or hospitals. We protect those infants who doctors diagnose as treatable and we protect the doctors who make that decision by providing a means for them to report a case in which they may disagree with the parents' decision.

And this is where we come into the definition that is so often being referred to here today as "loving parents."

I wish that we could assume that every parent is loving, that every parent cares about their child, but unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, and my colleagues, as we conduct hearings around the country, as we hear from groups that come in, and we have had parents, repentant ones at that, who have come in after 20 years of child abuse. In 80 percent of all of the reported cases of child abuse in this country, the abuse is at the hands of parents and we could hardly call them loving parents. Eighty percent of all cases of sexual abuse in this country is at the hands of parents, and those who serve in loco parentis. They are not loving parents.

Yes; if all parents were loving, then I would leave the decision to them for I know in my own family what loving parents do when they care about savings an infant who weighs under 2 pounds and who is possibly blind. And we care, we pray, and we trust the physicians who are trying to save that life at this very moment.

We cannot step back from our commitment that we put in this bill, and as the Congressman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) spoke a little while ago about our commitment to infants and our commitment to children. But if we adopt this substitute we are saying to HHS, we are saying to parents who are not loving, we are saying to the country that infants are no longer children, that we are removing from this bill of child protection those children who are infants. We are telling the country very clearly that infants are not children and do not deserve child protection.

None of us may want to go through life with the handicaps and the disabilities that we envision that some infants might have and might incur, but who among us will say, "I do not want to lead that life, therefore, that life should not be led." We cannot place ourselves in that position.

Nor do we, as the gentleman from Tennessee indicated, say that the Federal Government is going to enter and decide. We absolutely do not say that. We are saying the contrary. The Federal Government does not have any say in who shall live and who shall die. We are merely saying to the States, provide an agency to oversee what should be done, provide a committee, if you want to, in each medical care facility to have that doctor consult with, provide a directory that parents may find where there is help for such children.

Let me read off the list of those agencies that support our bill, as amended: The Association for Retarded Citizens, the American Life Lobby, Disability Rights Center, Pro-Life Action League, Christian Action Council, Spina Bifida Association, National Right to Life Committee, National Doctors for Life, the Reagan administration, HHS, and the 56 cosponsors of this bill.

I can only say, Mr. Chairman, there has been a terrible amount of misinformation disseminated on the floor today. I regret that. We believe that our measure, with our amendments that have been so meticulously worked out for a year, on both sides, and reported out of committee unanimously, provides the proper protection at a very minimum level.

And I ask my colleagues to join me in opposing the substitute.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, faced with a severely handicapped child, probably the most painful decision of a parent's life, I say very simply that Government does not belong in the hospital room.

I say that parents love their infant. And I ask: Does anyone have the right to judge that, least of all those Members sitting here in this Chamber? What gives us that right?

And I say that doctors are advocates for these newborns, and if anyone has worked with pediatricians, you will know what I am talking about.

Having had two premature children myself, I know what incredible efforts are made—and in our case, thank goodness they were incredibly successful efforts. I know what loving parents and doctors will do.

I have visited pediatric wards all over my district. Anyone who questions the dedication of nurses and doctors in pediatric hospitals I say is simply uninformed or misinformed or is prejudiced.

You cannot imagine the hurt that these doctors and nurses are feeling right now because there are those in government who question their dedication to life. That is why they are there. That is what they are trained for, to preserve and enhance life. In the case of pediatricians and nurses who are dedicated to this, it is indeed their whole life.

Think about parents, who are hurt beyond belief by this terrible tragedy in their lives, being hauled into court for their loving judgment because Members of Congress wish to dictate their personal decision which must be made in the family with consultation with their doctor and their God.

So this amendment is very important to all of us, for those of us who treasure and value family and value love and value children and value life. I urge Members on both sides of the aisle to support it.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the Chandler substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I think that the Chandler substitute is a much superior way to address what is a very difficult problem.

During the past year I have had an opportunity to visit a number of hospitals and to meet with a number of doctors who have been involved in the incidents and the concerns that we are expressing here today about newborn infants with very serious medical conditions. I only wish every Member of this Congress could listen to the doctors describe the involvement of the parents. of the grandparents, of the brothers and sisters of the newborn, in trying to arrive at a decision of what kind of medical care should be carried out and what kind of procedure should be followed. I only wish every Member could listen to the doctors describing the parents coming back to the hospital in the middle of the night, sitting at the side of the child that is in the intensive care unit, the grandparents coming to look at the child and to sit all night with the child, and making a decision as to whether it is going to be conservative medical treatment, ordinary medical treatment or heroic efforts; I only wish every Member could listen to those involved in making those kinds of decisions, calling in all kinds of experts, calling in religious advisers to help these people.

That is the norm in the situations. That is the norm

My fear, and I believe it is a real one, is that after a family goes through that, they can find themselves in the situation of the family of Baby Jane Doe. Not Baby Doe. That was an outrageous situation repugnant to every Member of this House. But because someone determines that they are an interested party they will sue under this statute or under the conformed statutes, or a district attorney who has political ambitions will determine he is an interested party and now that family is on public display. Yes this family has just made a very private, difficult, troublesome and anguishing decision, and many times parents must make these decisions because of time lines that run on the condition of the baby. And we just watched this. And I do not think that is what the authors want to happen. I think that the Chandler amendment allows us to push hospitals into making conscientious efforts to make sure that proper medically indicated services are provided.

The question of the handicapped child is in fact addressed under the regulations HHS issued under section 504. As the Members know, I fought in committee to insure that we not denigrate any rights to the handicapped to medical services or any other services because of their handicap.

I think the amendment is troublesome, it is meddlesome, and, at best, it is redundant of the rights that are already guaranteed to the handicapped under the Surgeon General's recently issued regulations under that act.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of California. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, a little while ago the gentleman was talking about charging doctors on the panel with child abuse under this act, and I assured you there are no criminal sanctions.

Let me assure you equally there is no cause of action against parents under this bill. So you are just beating the wrong horse.

Mr. MILLER of California. Let me reclaim my time.

Let me assure you that people get charged every day with actions that do not hold up after a court hearing. As we know, in this country you can sue anybody for anything. The gentleman's amendment requires that the States conform to this statute, which is to insure this medically indicated treatment, and therefore the failure to provide that must be something—it is not a vacuum out there—and so this family, which, according to the medical profession and the people we have talked to, is the norm, now finds they are on public display and they are saddled with this situation.

I just think we are going way beyond the bounds of decency. That child, the handicapped child, the Bloomington case which outraged this Nation, is in fact taken care of and protected under section 504. I think the Chandler amendment heads us in the direction of making sure that we continue with the norm and that for those cases that are outside of the norm hospitals set up committees so that they do not happen again. I think that is the best way to handle the most difficult, difficult situation. I just wish that the Members of this Congress would spend more time talking to these families, to the members of these families, be they extended families or the parents of these children, to understand what it meant during that pregnancy to believe that the best of all worlds was going to be visited upon them in a healthy, normal, wonderful bouncy child, and then to find out that no skull existed, to find out that the intestines were outside the body, to find out that the child, at best, is going to die within a year, to find out all of that, and then to find out that somebody proclaims they are an interested party and hauls you off to court to second-guess every medical decision you made, every ethical decision you have made, and every personal decision you have made.

I think the Chandler amendment allows us to go forward and secure the privacy and the sanctity of these children and at the same time does not put the State in the business of making these determinations.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the Members that under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered into, all time for debate on title I has expired.

The Chair will advise the Members that any Member who has an amendment that is not printed in the RECORD may offer that amendment without further unanimous consent. No debate may be had on it.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. FIEDLER TO THE AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. CHANDLER AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. MURPHY

Ms. FIEDLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes in order to offer an amendment which I believe will be accepted by the author of the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. FIEDLER to the amendments offered by Mr. CHANDLER as a substitute for the amendments offered by Mr. MURPHY: On page 2, line 4, of the amendment immediately before the semicolon add, "but not by withholding nourishment".

The CHAIRMAN. The gentlewoman from California (Ms. FIEDLER) is recognized for 3 minutes.

Ms. FIEDLER. I thank the Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, the reason that I offer this amendment is that I, and perhaps you, have heard of cases of infants that have been left without nourishment after decisions have been made not to offer additional medical treatment.

While I believe that the basic components of the Chandler amendment are appropriate, I also want to make certain that infants in the future under this amendment, should it be adopted, are not left without nourishment. I think that it is inappropriate under any circumstances, and certainly it is not the intent of the maker of the motion to leave any question on this issue.

So I would ask that the maker of the motion consider this.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. FIEDLER. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to indicate to the body that I have no objection to this amendment, and I think it strengthens our amendment.

Ms. FIEDLER. I thank the gentleman.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, if a Member has an amendment to this section, but not to the amendments that are now before us, which was printed in the RECORD, is it the understanding of the Chair that that Member will be protected to offer that amendment and have 5 minutes of debate time following the vote on the amendments now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The Chair would advise the gentleman that he must offer the exact amendment that was printed in the RECORD.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. FIEDLER) to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. CHANDLER) as a substitute for the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY).

The amendment to the amendments offered as a substitute for the amendments was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Washington (Mr. CHANDLER), as amended, as a substitute for the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The following Members responded to their names:

□ 1440

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY).

The amendments were agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WALKER

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALKER: On page 3, after line 18, add the following new subsection:

"(9) The Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect shall prepare and transmit to the Congress annual reports making recommendations on how to reduce the incidence of child prostitution in our Nation."

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute to explain the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER) is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, one of the tragedies of our time on the streets of our cities is the incidence of child prostitution where organized crime is literally kidnaping young children and forcing them into prostitution in this country.

This is an amendment to see to it that we do take some steps toward reducing the incidence of that in this country.

Mr. MURPHY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who I understand is prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. MURPHY. I thank the gentleman and advise my colleague that today only, I agree with my colleague from Pennsylvania and accept the amendment.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the chairman and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GEKAS

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GEKAS: Page 8, after line 14, insert the following new subsection:

(b) Section 6 of the Act is further amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new section:

"(d) The Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect shall conduct a study on the relationship between the providers of child care services under this Act and State and local law enforcement agencies, with particular emphasis on the provisions of this Act and appropriate State laws which affect the ability of child care providers and law enforcement agencies to share information concerning repeated or life-threatening cases of child abuse. Such study shall not consider instances of infants at risk with life-threatening congenital impairments. Not later than one year after the date of enactment of the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983, the Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect shall prepare and submit to the Congress a report of such study.".

Page 8, line 12, insert "(a)" after "SEC. 105.".

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would inquire of the gentleman whether this is identical to the amendment the gentleman inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. GEKAS. No, it is not, Mr. Chairman. This is an amendment to which there has been agreement rendered by both sides.

But I do ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to proceed for 1 minute in order to explain the contents of the amendment, which, as I said, has been agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS) is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. GEKAS. I thank first of all the Chairman for giving me this 1 minute, and also I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ERLENBORN) for agreeing to the amendment.

This would simply add to the duties of the Advisory Board on Child Abuse and Neglect one additional facet of the study which they are to conduct under this bill, and that would be to reasonably investigate the relationship between law enforcement agencies and the social agencies, both of whom have different aspects of involvement in the child abuse process.

Sometimes we run into problems as to confidentiality and other things in which they might come into conflict. This study now, with my amendment included, would include a report back to us on that relationship so that law enforcement would have its proper role in wherever it may count.

I thank the gentleman and yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GEKAS).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title I?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LUNGREN

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which was printed in the RECORD on January 30.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUNGREN: On page 2, line 18, insert "between abortion, between child pornography," after "unemployment,".

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Chairman, it is estimated that in the next decade there will be 1.5 million battered children in the United States resulting in 50,000 deaths, 300,000 permanently injured children and more who are developmentally retarded. In fact, numerous studies confirm that child abuse is one of the most frequent causes of death among children. As Dr. Irwin Hedlner, who investigated child abuse at Jackson Memorial Hospital in Miami put it: "If child abuse were polio, the whole country would be up in arms looking for a solution."

It is therefore fitting that this serious national tragedy should be accorded equally serious treatment. The language in H.R. 1904 calls for studies to determine the relationship between both unemployment and nonpayment of child support with child abuse and neglect. Due to the magnitude and serious nature of the problem of child abuse, it is quite evident that the scope of inquiry covered by the studies called for in the bill is much too narrow. In addition, I might add parenthetically that I am somewhat skeptical about how meaningful the current language of the bill will prove to be. Are we supposed to believe that the record decline in unemployment during 1983 (involving nearly 4 million people who entered the labor force) was accompanied by a similar decline in child abuse. I seriously doubt it.

Nevertheless, if we are to instruct HHS to proceed with such a study, it is my feeling that it should be broadened. If we are really serious about understanding the underlying causes of this terrible social problem we should not foreclose the scope of inquiry so narrowly. Although there are many causal factors that might be studied, I intend to offer an amendment to add both abortion and child pornography to the inquiry. Thus if my amendment is adopted HHS will be instructed to look at the relationship between unemployment and child abuse and neglect; between abortion and child abuse and neglect; between child pornography and child abuse and neglect, and between nonpayment of child support and child abuse and neglect.

It is my feeling that any analysis of the causes of child abuse would be incomplete if it did not include consideration of the impact of abortion. While there are numerous correlational studies with regard to this area it is my feeling that further research is needed with respect to the issue of causation itself.

With this in mind, Dr. Philip Ney of the University of British Columbia, reports that death to Canadian children from social causes rapidly increased after abortion became available on demand in 1969. He found that in British Columbia and Ontario, with the highest rates of abortion, are also the Provinces with the highest rates of child abuse. Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, and New Brunswick, with low rates of abortion, were found to also have low rates of abuse. The rates of increase of child abuse were found to parallel the rate of increase in abortions.

Ney found a similar correlation in the United States where the incidence of child abuse and abortion have risen together.

In Japan, abortion laws have been liberalized for many years. At the same time, Dr. Wanda Franz of the University of West Virginia reports that the incidence of child abuse is a serious national problem for the Japanese.

While the existence of related variables does not alone prove causation, it is my feeling that sufficient question has been raised to warrant an inquiry into the relationship between abortion and child abuse.

My amendment also provides for a study to examine the relationship between child pornography and child abuse and neglect. I cannot imagine a clearer example of the dehumanization and exploitation of our children than that of child pornography. If we are sincere in our desire to examine the problem of child abuse then it follows that the brutalization that takes place in sex films and other forms of perverse expression ought to be subject to our inquiry.

The exploitation of children in pornography is in itself a form of child abuse. The scope of consideration under my amendment would go beyond this however, to include the impact that this dehumanization of children has on the general question of child abuse. In this regard, the relationship of child pornography to the sexual exploitation of children would seem to be a particularly important part of this inquiry.

Unlike the abortion question, there is surprisingly a paucity of correlational data on the existence of any relationship between pornography and child abuse and neglect. However, the existence of much anecdotal evidence derived from child welfare agencies, law enforcement authorities, and others, gives rise to the conclusion that systematic compilation and study would constitute a constructive contribution toward a better understanding of the problem of child abuse and neglect. I ask you to join me in support of my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY), and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ERLENBORN), the chairman and ranking member of the committee, accept this amendment.

With that, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. LUNGREN).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title I?

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. MARRIOTT

Mr. MARRIOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have three amendments which were printed in the RECORD on October 26. I will drop the third one and I ask unanimous consent to put the first two en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARRIOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the two amendments en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. MARRIOTT:

Page 7, beginning on line 4, strike out "$25,000,000" and all that follows through "1987" and insert in lieu thereof "$35,000,000 for fiscal year 1984, $36,250,000 for fiscal year 1985, $37,563,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $38,941,000 for fiscal year 1987."

Page 7, beginning on line 22, strike out "$3,000,000" and all that follows through "1987", and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987."

Mr. MARRIOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am offering two very important amendments on the floor of the House today. I ask my colleagues to join with me to help our abused children. If we do not, we, too, will be guilty of child neglect.

My first amendment will increase by $10 million the authorization for child abuse for State grants, research and improvement in the delivery of services providing for a $35 million authorization level rather than the $25 million contained in the committee bill.

My second amendment will add $7 million to help prevent sexual abuse, including the exploitation of children in the production of pornography. My amendment will increase the $3 million figure contained in H.R. 1904 to $10 million—a figure still absurdly low.

Mr. Chairman, let's put some meat into this bill. I believe that the members of the Education and Labor Committee did an excellent job in holding the necessary hearings, and have drafted a good reauthorization measure. This measure will greatly benefit our youth. But, I firmly believe that the need for increased funding is more than obvious. Join with me in providing a child abuse funding level that is adequate to meet our individual States' needs.

Let us look at some figures:

First, 850,000 children are abused and neglected annually.

Second, 547,680 children are severely injured, or seriously impaired.

Third, unreported child abuse cases are in excess of 1 million.

Fourth, 1,500 cases of the 12,000 new cases of cerebral palsy in 1977 were a direct result of child abuse.

Fifth, in 1982, there were 3,000 new cases of cerebral palsy in children under age 5 due to child abuse.

Sixth, abused juveniles are 24 more times as likely to engage in hostile assaults, 58 more times likely to commit rape, and twice as likely to commit murder.

Seventh, abused children are 10 times more likely to need special education which costs 3 to 7 times more than regular education.

Eighth, one-third of all homicides show child abuse in the murderer's childhood.

Ninth, the majority of runaways try to escape abuse, often sexual abuse, then become child prostitutes and receive more abuse.

We know what child abuse costs in terms of human loss, do you know what rampant child abuse costs financially? Look at these:

First, $101.2 million per year for initial medical diagnosis of physically abused children, based on only 250,000 cases of abuse. And we know this figure is soaring.

Second, $101.2 million does not include the costs of: Foster care, adjudication, hospital treatment, therapy, law enforcement and social service agency costs.

Third, $1.14 million for each child with life time neurological damage requiring institutional care, just until they reach age 45—and we know that many live beyond this age.

Fourth, Children's Hospital in Washington, D.C., alone, admits at least 150 child abuses cases per year to intensive care at a price tag of $2,880 per child—collectively $500,000.

Fifth, intensive care for a seriously abused child in metropolitan hospitals is $960 per day per child.

Sixth, uncalculated costs for the care of the prison population where 70 percent to 80 percent of the sexual offenders have been victims of sexual abuse.

Seventh, dramatically increasing costs reported by 32 States in the number of child abuse and neglect cases each social worker has.

Eighth, the human cost in the fact that 23 percent of the police killed in the line of duty and 40 percent of the police injured in the line of duty are responding to a "domestic" problem.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on and on with these statistics, but, I believe that every Member in this Chamber knows the sad realities of child abuse. I also believe that every Member in this Chamber agrees that the $17 million increase I am proposing in these two amendments, combined, is desperately needed.

It will save our taxpayers, Mr. Chairman, if we treat the currently abused children so they can become productive citizens and eliminate the intergenerational occurrences of child abuse. It will save our taxpayers if the Federal Government can work with the States in establishing preventive care for the abusers to eliminate these soaring statistics.

My most important message to my colleagues here today is twofold:

First, we must help our children currently being abused.

Second, rampant child abuse is preventable—and we can help.

Mr. Chairman, I believe my amendments are worthy, but even they do not go far enough in solving these problems. Children have a right to a healthy childhood.

There are good conservative Members in the Chamber, and I consider myself to be one of them, who are worried about our deficits. I am well aware of the need to keep Federal spending within reasonable bounds.

Given the statistics of child abuse and neglect which this Nation faces annually, we would be "penny-wise and pound-foolish" if we fail to support State efforts to combat a problem that is 100 times greater than the last polio epidemic.

These are modest increases—modest in light of the ultimate costs of abuse and neglect. If we turn our back on the need for these increases, we will be guilty of child neglect ourselves.

The abused and the abusers alike need our help—I for one am ready to give it, are you?

Please join with me in supporting these two amendments. Let us start in the prevention of a phenomenon that robs millions of children—year after year—of their right to a healthy childhood. This phenomenon robs the taxpayers—year after year—by draining our Nation's health resources, social systems and Nation's schools.

Let our children know they have a voice in the Congress. They are our future. I stand before you today to speak for our children.

One year ago, this body recognized the need for a select committee to look after the problems facing our children. As ranking Republican on the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, I report back to you that I have thoroughly studied the crisis of child abuse.

Our help is needed—now. Let us not neglect this need or our children.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MARRIOTT. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. It is a travesty that this Congress would let this law expire which is already so inadequate to the need of abused and neglected children across this Nation. I rise in support of Mr. MARRIOTT's amendment. As my ranking minority member on the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, we have learned together, in hearings throughout the country, of the need for additional funding for this legislation:

The National Conference on Catholic Charities, the largest private social service organization in the Nation, told us their agencies have experienced a 65-percent increase in the number of abused children served between 1980 and 1982.

In Utah, we learned that reports of child abuse have increased 61 percent since 1979.

In Maine, reports of child maltreatment increased 166 percent between 1976 and 1980.

Michigan had 38,000 cases reported in 1983 and experienced a severity of cases.

The American Humane Association recently determined that the total number of child abuse reports for 1982 reached 936,000 cases. This is 10 percent more than reports in 1981 and 16 percent more than in 1980. A nationwide survey completed this past October by the National Center on Prevention of Child Abuse reports that, in the previous 12 months 38 States witnessed an increase in the severity of child abuse cases; 43 States witnessed an increase in reports of sexual abuse of children; 32 States witnessed a dramatic increase in worker caseload size.

Yet despite this outbreak of violence against children, often fueled by unemployment, public resources for treatment are shrinking:

Federal child abuse money was reduced from $22.9 million to $16.9 million. Funds for title XX, the major Federal program of support to States for social services, was cut 23 percent in 1982.

Mr. MARRIOTT and I heard testimony at Select Committee hearings about the effects of these budget cuts:

In Los Angeles, the number of child abuse cases referred to the Department of Public Services increased 46 percent between 1978 and 1982, while the number of children services workers available to handle the cases correspondingly declined 18 percent.

Many witnesses described adoption of "triaging" procedures—only the most severe cases receive services.

In my own district of Contra Costa County, these screening procedures mean that no child age 12 or older, except in the most extreme cases, can receive protective services. Many troubled teenagers, including sexually abused adolescents, are now rejects of the protective services system.

I am especially pleased that this bill restores funding for programs for sexually abused children and their families which I created in 1978. Funding for these programs was callously eliminated in 1981 by the Reagan administration.

I commend Mr. MARRIOTT for requesting additional appropriations for victims of sexual abuse. At select committee hearings, Mr. MARRIOTT and I have heard from witnesses across the Nation that the problem of child sexual abuse is increasing:

Maine reported that sexual abuse increased 42.3 percent between 1976 and 1980.

At University Hospital in Colorado, the number of sexual-abuse cases seen increased eightfold from 1980 and 1983.

A sexual-abuse awareness and treatment program, reaching 12,000 children in a three-county area of Minnesota, found one in four girls are victims of sexual abuse.

In a recent survey conducted by the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse, 43 States report noticeable increases in reports of sexual abuse.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is, of course, always difficult to speak in opposition to spending more money on a problem that is pervasive, that is as difficult, and as important as child abuse in this country. But it would seem to me that some facts need to be brought to the attention of this House.

We cannot continue to decide how much money or how much Federal money we spend on a problem in this country based on the emotion of the moment and the title of the bill.

As the amendment's sponsor, a gentleman whom I respect a great deal, has said he could just as easily have made the argument for $100 million or billion or $100 billion because the problems of child abuse are so difficult.

I would bring to the committee's and the Congress attention that last year the Congress spent on this bill $16.199 million on the Child Abuse Act. This committee, in a bipartisan effort, has increased it in the bill before us without the amendment by 73 percent in the fiscal year to $28 million, but the gentleman's amendment would increase that to $45 million in the first year, an increase over last year of 196 percent in 1 year.

I would suggest to my colleagues that in addition, Mr. Chairman, that there is a non sequitur contained within the bill. That is a non sequitur that refutes in many ways the gentleman's amendment. It is contained in title 1 in which the department is instructed to "study and investigate the national incidents of child abuse and neglect, including a determination of what relationship may exist between unemployment and nonpayment of child support and child abuse and neglect."

Mr. Chairman, every dollar that we spend when we do not show our sincerity to reducing that deficit is going to be a dollar that is going to add to inflation, add to interest rates, and add to unemployment in this country.

I realize that is the same argument that is made about every increase in spending. I would suggest that a 196-percent increase in 1 year goes too far, is something that in many ways could well, by adding to inflation and by adding to the deficit, could add to child abuse. So says the bill itself in studying that relationship.

Mr. MARRIOTT. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. MARRIOTT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I appreciate what the gentleman is saying and I think the gentleman is taking a fiscally responsible position in trying to keep the cost down, but the facts are—and I have studied child abuse now for the last year—by assisting in preventing child abuse we will save the Federal Government millions and millions and millions of dollars.

Child abuse in America is a serious problem. It is eroding the family, it is getting at the hard base of some of our economic problems, and it seems to me that for the sake of an additional $7 or $10 million this is a very small price to pay to see if we cannot solve the problem. We have got lots of money. We are throwing dollars around here like it is going out of style.

To reallocate some of it to helping our children is absolutely essential.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, I respect the gentleman a great deal, but what he proposes is not to reallocate some of the funds that we spend around here. It is to spend more funds. It shows the House's continued lack of sincerity on the deficit and it would add to unemployment, which ultimately could add to child abuse and cost more pain and more money in the long run.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ERLENBORN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to reiterate what the gentleman has already said that in a bipartisan fashion, after negotiation and compromise within our committee, we increased the funding authorized in this bill almost 75 percent over what was spent last year.

Now, to have someone, not a member of the committee and not part of that process, come on the floor and say, "I can prove I am more dedicated to this than the committee, because I am going to offer an amendment to add $10 million to it," I do not think is quite fair.

If we are going to try to outbid each other with the taxpayers' funds, we know what is going to happen. That has been going on around here for the last 20 years and that is what has happened today. We have a $200 billion deficit.

Now, day after day under 1-minute speeches, I hear Members down in the well telling us that we are going to have to "cut that deficit, cut that deficit."

Well, let me just say we are not going to cut that deficit by trying to outbid each other with the taxpayers' dollars by adding more to every appealing program that comes along.

Let us put some faith in the committee. Let us put some faith in the negotiation and compromise already undertaken.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for his remarks and concur.

Outbidding is a good analogy because that is what we are doing. We are saying, "I want to increase the ante," because the bill has a popular title, without consideration, without reason, without regard for how much would be effective.

I urge the House to reject this amendment and adopt a reasonable 73-percent increase for title I of H.R. 1904.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah (Mr. MARRIOTT).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title I?

If not, the Clerk will designate title II.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GOODLING

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GOODLING: Page 12, strike out line 21 and all that follows through line 2 on page 13, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 204. Section 205 of the Act is amended by striking out "$5,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1978, and such sums as may be necessary for the succeeding three fiscal years" and inserting in lieu thereof "$2,500,000 for fiscal year 1984, and for each of the three subsequent fiscal years".

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment to section 204 of the bill for the purpose of increasing the adoption opportunities programs, authorization of appropriation to $2.5 million for fiscal years 1984 through 1987. Today less than $2 million is directly available to promote adoption for children with special needs.

I believe this increase is consistent with our awareness of increased rates of child abuse and neglect across the country. Fully one-third of the inherent victims of abuse, neglect, and abandonment will find a secure and loving home only through adoption. Estimates of the number of children who need adoptive parents range from 50,000 to 100,000.

These children are more difficult to place than the eagerly sought healthy infants. Waiting children are school-aged, mentally, physically, or emotionally handicapped, members of a sibling group or a racial or ethnic minority. Title II is specifically focused on the plight of these youngsters, who all too often grow up in a series of foster homes and institutions.

I am especially aware of adoption because of the successful work and national reputation of Tressler-Lutheran Service Associates of York, Pa. This agency's unique adoption program is directed by a remarkable couple, Bill and Barbara Tremitiere, themselves parents of 12 adopted youngsters.

For the past 10 years, T-LSA has focused entirely on placement and of children of special needs. Over 1,500 children have found permanent families through the efforts of Tressler-Lutheran's innovative program. Hundreds of new families have been formed in my district through adoption. The agency has no children in its care. It serves as a special home finding service for public and private agencies across the country.

The unique methods developed by Tressler-Lutheran have been shared through funding made available under title II. Working with the North American Council on Adoptable Children, a national umbrella group for adoptive parents, the Tremitieres and other T-LSA staff presented training workshops in four locations. The TEAM program they developed has demonstrated the value and applicability of using volunteer parents as coleaders and agency resources in recruiting, training, and assisting families who accept the challenges of adopting children with special needs. Adoption is cost effective, as it reduces the ongoing burden on social service systems. Adoption costs an average of approximately $3,000 per placement. This is a one-time cost for family services and a significant savings, as the child placed is legally adopted. By contrast, foster care services are the largest single child welfare expense, increasing each year as a child remains in public care. Institutional placements range from $10,000 to $25,000 per child per year.

These youngsters and families need Congress continued help. The children who are the focus of title II are by definition among the most vulnerable in our society. They have been abused, neglected, or abandoned by their biological parents. They are without family ties, the basis for human identity, dignity, and self-worth.

Yet, programs begun with these Federal funds have demonstrated that parents can be found, capable of giving these children a new opportunity at family life. Targeted efforts to reach black and Hispanic families can have a crucial impact, since over one-half of the children legally free for adoption are of minority race or heritage. Homes for Black Children projects and special efforts like the National Adoption Exchange match children with parents. Tressler-Lutheran has worked closely with these groups to find families for waiting children wherever they live in the country.

This network is local, State, and national programs is helping reduce the delays and procedural difficulties that have been major barriers to adoption across State and county jurisdictional lines. Expansion of these initiatives will help more children find adoptive homes.

Judges and court staff and mental health professionals have also been engaged in working cooperatively on behalf of waiting children. The newly formed Specialized Pennsylvania Adoption Network (SPAN), organized by Tressler-Lutheran is an example of the fine results possible when parents, community groups, and social service professionals unite. The staff and volunteers at Tressler-Lutheran have successfully placed 11 children with Down's Syndrome this year and over a dozen with similar severe disabilities, including autism, cerebral palsy, blindness, profound hearing loss, and spina bifida.

Tressler-Lutheran has proven that no child is unadoptable. Families can be found and waiting children can be placed in permanent loving homes. Surely these initiatives must continue as an important national priority. The children who are victims of child abuse and neglect deserve our support and the assistance offered by title II programs in starting a new life.

I would urge my colleagues who are committed to continuing to meet the adoptive needs of very special youngsters everywhere to wholeheartedly support this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GOODLING).

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to title II?

Are there further amendments to the bill?

Mr. MURPHY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close within 1 hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto will be limited to 1 hour.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer our amendment to H.R. 1904. The family violence prevention and services amendment addresses one of the most serious problems in our Nation today.

I especially want to thank the gentlewoman from Maryland (Ms. MIKULSKI) and the gentlewoman from Louisiana (Mrs. BOGGS) who have been along on this effort year after year as we have brought it to the House of Representatives where it has received overwhelming bipartisan support. I also want to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BIAGGI) for their continuing help in these efforts.

The amendment provides modest funding to States—$65 million over a 3-year period—to establish, maintain, or expand family violence programs. Seventy-five percent of moneys are designated for programs providing immediate shelter care for the victims of family violence and their dependents, and for other related assistance such as family counseling services coordinated with existing community agencies, and outreach services for victims remaining in their homes. The remaining 25 percent is reserved for efforts to prevent family violence such as counseling programs for abusers, crisis hotlines, and teaching of nonviolent behavior to children.

Seventy percent of the grants to States must also go to private nonprofit groups. There are limits on the amount any one project can receive: No more than $50,000 in any year and no more than $150,000 over 3 years. Stringent matching of funds from 20 percent the first year up to 33⅓ percent the third year, 50 percent of which must be raised from private sources, is also a requirement.

In addition to the basic grant, a small amount—$2 million over 3 years—is designated for training of law enforcement officials and police to aid them in responding to incidents of family violence.

In sum, this amendment provides for a limited Federal role to support programs at the local level that are making an effort to support themselves.

But while the House saw the need to act against family violence, its will has been thwarted. And while the Federal Government has rested, abuse at home has escalated. Battery is now the single major cause of injury to women, more significant than auto accidents, rapes, or muggings. Some 2,000 to 4,000 women are beaten to death annually—40 percent of all women killed, and 10 percent of men are murdered by their partners.

Witnesses, in hearings held across the Nation by the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Families, provided stark evidence that family violence is getting worse. The National Conference of Catholic Charities testified that the number of abused adults coming to its agencies jumped from 7,244 in 1980 to 13,566 in 1981—nearly double. In Utah, we learned that five shelters have opened in the State since 1976, and served 3,000 women and their children in 1983 alone. State-funded shelters in Michigan have seen a 58-percent increase between 1980 and 1983. And committee members heard about similar increases in the demand for shelter services by abused women in New York and California.

Women are not the only victims of family violence. Shelter programs for abused wives report an increasing number of residents are children in need of services. Children exposed to the violence of parent against parent, often exhibit a wide range of emotional and behavioral problems. They frequently grow up to become adults who inflict violence on their own children and spouses, or become the next generation of victims.

Yet, women and children are still not the whole story of family violence. Many more men than we realized suffer silently as battered husbands. And we are beginning to understand that many dependent elderly people live in fear of abuse by their adult children.

The Department of Defense reports that 1,000 military families across the Nation each month need the services that the family violence prevention and services amendment would provide. Special effort should be made by family violence programs to reach the families of our Armed Forces. Their presence in a given State should be counted as part of the census when determining grant allocations.

Finally, all too often, family violence reaches beyond the confines of family relationships. Police spend one-third of their time responding to domestic violence calls. Twenty percent of all police deaths on duty and 40 percent of all injuries occur during response to a domestic complaint.

It has been 4 years since this body passed family violence legislation. During that period, unemployment peaked at 10.8 percent and in its wake has been a corresponding escalation of violence at home. Last year in a Labor Standards Subcommittee hearing of the effects of unemployment, the Illinois Coalition Against Domestic Violence reported that in one community, 75 percent of the women seeking shelter cited their husband's layoff as the reason precipitating first time physical abuse. In Youngstown, Ohio, where unemployment reached 21 percent in 1982, cases of domestic violence have increased 404 percent since 1979.

But while the Federal Government has been slow to respond to this major social problem, States and local communities have acted. Over 500 community shelters now dot the American landscape. Working with a network of other nonprofit agencies, they have formed coalitions to assist victims of family violence. Many States have also strengthened their laws to provide better protection for the victims of family violence.

One of the most important grassroots developments has been the effort to prevent family violence. Shelters often together with other local and State public and private nonprofit agencies have created community and public education programs, including teaching nonviolent behavior to children. They have established crisis hotlines and training to improve intervention within criminal justice, medical and social service agencies. Finally, they have developed counseling and education programs for abusers, as well as family counseling aimed to achieve, where appropriate, reunification and rehabilitation of a family affected by violence.

But much remains to be done—and now more than ever. A recent survey of 665 family violence programs found that at a time of skyrocketing demand, 75 percent have had to reduce services due to cutbacks in title XX funds, VISTA, and LEAA, and elimination of the CETA program. Junior Leagues, YWCA's, women's groups, church groups, and many other throughout the country, who serve as the backbone of local shelters and safe homes, are stretching their dollars and their energy to the limit. They are trying, but the private sector simply cannot bridge the gap of dramatically increasing demand and diminished public funding.

Family violence is not a partisan issue. Over 130 of our colleagues—Republicans and Democrats alike—have joined in cosponsoring this amendment. In years past, an overwhelming majority of the Members of this body have voted for similar legislation. The list of cosponsors of the family violence prevention and services amendment, and supporting organizations follows:

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise as a coauthor of this amendment to express my strong support for its provisions and urge my colleagues to join us in going on record to address a growing problem of hidden—yet major dimensions.

The problem of family violence is not a new one. It has been a part of our society for many years, yet has remained, for the most part, submerged behind walls. It is also a delicate subject for it involves violence against family members. Family violence and all its unpleasant aspects is not new to me as I witnessed it firsthand on countless occasions in my 23-year career as a New York City police officer. My experience with family violence prompted me to introduce, as one of my first acts upon coming to Congress, legislation to treat victims of child abuse. The reauthorization of that landmark legislation is what we have before us today.

The family violence prevention and services amendment is a consistent outgrowth of our efforts to address child abuse. Just as we recognized that child abuse was the problem of the 1960's—domestic violence became the problem of the 1970's. Five years ago, I was one of several authors of legislation to create programs to assist victims of domestic violence. Despite our best efforts, a domestic violence bill was never signed into law.

This amendment here today is an attempt to expand the success of the child abuse program to assist other family members who also suffer from similar acts of violence. Laudibly, we have adopted a Federal response to the problem of child abuse. Now is the time to move forward with a long overdue Federal response to aid spouses and other family members—including the elderly—which will replicate our success in combating child abuse.

As the author of companion legislation, H.R. 1007, I believe that this amendment is a well-constructed outgrowth of that legislation. The family violence amendment recognizes that if we are to assist many of these helpless victims—Federal leadership is essential ingredient to assistance.

This amendment provides help to the estimated 2.5 million victims of family violence by authorizing a total of $65 million over the next 3 years in the form of grant assistance to States, localities, or organizations in order to assist them in prevention and treatment activities. These activities could include the establishment or expansion of shelters to temporarily house victims and their dependents, and counselors and related social services from agencies and from within communities that will assist victims. No funds can be used to pay money directly to victims. No program sponsored by funds under this amendment can apply a mean test—although it is expected that local projects will prioritize so that the neediest are served first.

This amendment also calls for a national incidence study of the abuse of elderly family members. Just as the 1970's saw the rise of spousal abuser—and national attention focused on the problem—the 1980's is the decade of elder abuse. As an original member of the Select Committee on Aging, I have joined with a number of my colleagues, including our distinguished former chairman, CLAUDE PEPPER, in calling attention to this disgraceful problem. Despite our efforts to mobilize a coordinated response to this problem, only 27 States mandate reporting of elder abuse. As a result, our knowledge of the problem is sketchy yet, it is estimated to occur almost as frequently as child abuse—some 600,000 per year. This national study is critical as we are to mobilize local resources and make existing aging-related programs respond to this problem.

I also wish to point out for the record here, the family violence prevention and service amendment has been endorsed by two of our national aging organizations specifically because it addresses this problem. The National Council of Senior Citizens and the American Association of Retired Persons have both provided me with letters supporting our efforts here.

The second part of this amendment which also requires some attention is section 310 which provides training to law enforcement personnel. Two million dollars is authorized in competitive grants which would be awarded by the Justice Department to agencies which would establish programs to respond to incidents of family violence. The need for this program is clearly established. Our law enforcement officers spend one-third of their time responding to domestic-battery calls. Equally as important is the fact the battery remains the single major cause of injury to women—passing auto accidents, rapes, and muggings. If we can put effective deterrent techniques into place through our law enforcement system—it would be central to breaking the vicious cycle of family violence which has gone undetected on a major scale for decades.

The merits of this proposal are well-spelled out and have been skillfully articulated by my colleague, GEORGE MILLER, who also serves as the first chairman of the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families. Family violence is intergenerational—it effects spouses, parents, and children.

This amendment represents a solution in that it provides what these victims so desperately need—services. Victims of family violence are so often totally dependent—economically, psychologically, and socially—upon the other members of the family units. This, the cycle of violence is most often times perpetuated because these victims have no where else to turn.

This bill provides an alternative—it supports services to victims. Recognizing that family violence is multidimensional we cannot hope to stop the abuse, especially when it often has gone on for years. However, we can provide alternatives to abuse for those individuals who have no where else to turn. We can give them temporary shelter; we can provide them with avenues to help them prevent and treat being abused—as well as abusers themselves.

For the first time, we are also providing help to victims of elder abuse. I want to make it clear that this program will not only help spouses but will also help elderly family members who face the same kind of abuse. We know that existing shelters and social service agencies pay scant little attention to helping these victims. While we cannot hope to serve all those who are so brutally victimized by their children, we can at least begin to mobilize States and social service agencies to recognize the problem and provide them with avenues to treat it.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this amendment is consistent with the Child Abuse Act for it—for the first time—sees the problem and attempts to address it through the family unit.

This legislation has received the endorsement of countless of organizations, ranging from the American Bar Association, the Junior League, the National Council of Churches and as I mentioned, the National Council of Senior Citizens and the American Association of Retired Persons, to name but a few. It also represents the cumulative efforts of many of my colleagues here who have shared my interest in enacting such legislation—Representatives MURPHY, chairman of our subcommittee, MIKULSKI and BOGGS.

I urge my colleagues to join with us in supporting this bill.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIAGGI. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment my good friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BIAGGI).

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER). I am proud to be a cosponsor of this amendment which would extend the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act to include programs assisting victims of family violence.

Family violence is a serious problem in this country. It is estimated that our law enforcement officials spend one-third of their time responding to domestic violence calls, and the FBI has reported that 25 percent of all police officers killed in the line of duty, as well as 40 percent of those injured, were responding to incidents of family violence.

In addition to the well-documented tragedy of child abuse, family violence includes two other aspects that are somewhat neglected by current Federal legislation—wife beating and elder abuse. Reports have revealed that nearly 6 million wives are abused by their husbands each year, and some 2,000 to 4,000 women are beaten to death annually. With respect to the elderly, the Select Committee on Aging has found that there are approximately 600,000 cases of elder abuse each year, and that 84 percent of the abusers are related to the elder victim. This amendment would allow Federal funding to be used to address these additional aspects of family violence.

Private charitable organizations are to be commended for having taken the lead in providing much needed shelter and support services for family violence victims. These agencies, however, have depended largely on Federal funding for past activities and that funding has been drastically reduced. As a result, these organizations are unable to meet the ever-increasing need for these services. Some reports have indicated that for every person that these agencies can help, 10 people must be turned away.

Mr. Chairman, this intolerable situation must be reversed. The family violence prevention and services amendment would provide a small but necessary measure of Federal assistance to help stem the tide of this national tragedy. Its need was perhaps best summarized by Police Chief Reuben Greenberg of Charleston, S.C., when testifying before the House Subcommittee on Select Education on behalf of the Police Executive Research Forum:

On behalf of battered women and their children and on behalf of police officers who risk their lives every day to answer calls for help, we request the Congress to provide the necessary resources and assistance that will put a stop to this intolerable violence.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that my colleagues will join me in supporting the family violence prevention and services amendment.

FAMILY VIOLENCE—CHILD ABUSE STATS FOR FIRST DISTRICT

For 1983, in the Springfield-Holyoke-Greenfield Area: 434 women were sheltered, the highest number of any region in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts; 710 children were sheltered in the State; 933 women received face-to-face services; 6,015 abused people called the hotline from this area; and 41 beds are available in the area for shelter of abused people.

Therefore, these stats reflect a very active area where there is a great demand for these services.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in enthusiastic support of the family violence amendment offered to H.R. 1904.

Our passage today of this amendment and of H.R. 1904 would mark the resolve of the U.S. House of Representatives to remedy the ugly and pervasive problem of violence that affects families in each congressional district. I would like to speak about the amendment from my perspective as chair of the Task Force on Crisis Intervention, one of three task forces established by the House Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families.

The family violence amendment we are considering addresses three themes that have arisen in Select Committee hearings over and over again. Namely, that the crises of spouse abuse, battering of the elderly, and child abuse are on the increase; that private agencies have been outstanding in helping troubled families but cannot keep up with demand; and that we must both assist those in immediate need and take steps to prevent further incidences of violence.

PRIVATE SECTOR RESPONSE

An important featue of the family violence amendment is its recognition of a partnership between the Federal Government and private service agencies. Not less than 70 percent of the State grants awarded by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services each year would be distributed to nonprofit private service organizations. Special emphasis will be given to community-based projects of proven effectiveness.

This type of partnership was applauded by witnesses who testified on July 12, 1983, at a hearing conducted by my Task Force on Crisis Intervention. The first witness, Fr. Thomas Harvey, executive director of the National Conference on Catholic Charities, discussed the increase in families seeking assistance following abuse:

From 1980 to 1981, the number of abused adults coming to our agencies jumped from 7,244 to 13,566. Many of our agencies have opened new shelters for abused wives and children. Many have increased their counseling to the total family involved, because most abused spouses go back home. And children? In 1980 our agencies served 13,312 abused children. In 1981, 19,070. And in 1982, we served 21,988 abused children.

But Father Harvey noted that, despite Catholic Charities' willingness to help these families in crisis, its resources were stretched too thin by increased demand and shrinking Federal grants to accommodate everyone.

This is certainly true at Crescent House, New Orleans' only shelter for battered women and their children. It is operated by Associated Catholic Charities.

Crescent House's statistical report for the month of October 1983 clearly indicates that private efforts alone are not enough to cope with the rising tide of family violence. In October, Crescent House sheltered 22 adult women and 24 children, for a total of 46 people. Yet it had to turn away 52 clients—more than it handled. Eighteen of the 22 women who sought shelter at Crescent House reported annual income between $0 and $8,000. None of the remaining four earned more than $25,000.

This demonstrates that women do not remain in abusive households because they love the pain, or because they seek violence. Rather, they are economically vulnerable and frequently cannot afford to live elsewhere. Moderate Federal aid to shelters such as Crescent House would increase the likelihood that more abused spouses and children could be cared for, and that services could be improved.

It is encouraging that community support of shelters nationwide has been so strong. Again, our New Orleans shelter is an example. Last October, Brownie Troop 35 donated pumpkins filled with candy and stuffed animals for the children. A local K-Mart store donated 24 boxes of crayons. Students volunteered a considerable amount of time to care for the children. A doctor spent 8 hours caring for residents. Individuals donated clothing, books, toys, linens, furniture; even a barbecue grill.

But more people were turned away from Crescent House than could be let in. This is not suprising, since it is the only shelter facility serving Louisiana's largest metropolitan area.

PREVENTION SERVICES

In addition to the vital need for shelters and related services, abused victims must be aided so that future incidents of violence can be prevented.

The committee report on the child abuse bill (H. Rpt. 98-159) emphasizes the importance of prevention in terms of child abuse. It directs the National Center for Child Abuse and Neglect to spend a substantial portion of its funds on efforts to prevent child abuse and to encourage States to use a portion of their grants on prevention activities.

In keeping with the spirit and intent of the bill, I believe it's important to make prevention an integral part of the coordinated Federal effort addressing spouse abuse and abuse of the elderly. One type of this effort is the provision of family counseling where appropriate to achieve reunification and rehabilitation of a family affected by violence.

In conclusion, I hope that all of our colleagues will support the Miller-Murphy-Boggs-Mikulski-Biaggi family violence amendment. It is a modest and well thought out remedy to a national problem of dramatic but unknown proportions.

By passing this amendment, we can help dispel the feelings of shame and the torment of silence borne by victims of violent abuse and—hopefully—begin to break the cycle of violence that can plague many generations.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, the family violence prevention and services amendment will provide aid to millions of victims—abused children, battered women, and abused elderly. This amendment provides for $65 million over 3 years to fund programs which provide crisis services to these victims. It requires that 75 percent of these funds go to support and develop local or nonprofit programs providing immediate shelter and other services. Other funds establish a national clearinghouse and provide technical assistance grants. We talk a lot in this Congress about the local responsibility for providing social services. This legislation is a chance to recognize and support the valiant efforts of local groups who first served these victims—when no one else did. These community groups continue to lead the struggle to end family violence.

As a social worker, I witnessed firsthand the tragic impact of this problem on families of every social class and in every neighborhood. These experiences have made the prevention of family violence a priority with me since 1978, when this concept was first introduced.

I am gravely concerned that nearly 6 million wives are abused by their husbands each year: That physical battery is the single major cause of injury to women—more significant than auto accidents, rape, muggings. I am also concerned that 25 percent of the murders each year are committed by persons related to the victim. In 85 percent of the cases, the police had been called to the address once before to intervene in the violence.

Over 1 million children are abused each year—in 20 percent of the cases, a spouse is also being assaulted.

The 62 percent of the children who grow up in violent homes become violent adults.

Police spend one-third of their time responding to family violence calls. Over 30 percent of the police killed in the line of duty are killed responding to these calls.

These millions of victims—primarily women, children, and elderly—live in danger, fear, and isolation. Most shelters provide immediate safety and services 24 hours a day. Yet budget cuts at the State level and in title XX, CETA and LEAA have resulted in 76 percent of the shelters reducing their services. Now, many shelters must turn away 10 victims for every 1 they serve due to lack of space. For the millions of victims abused each year, there are only about 260,000 spaces available each year in shelters.

Being "Pro-Family" means providing this desperately needed support to insure that all families can be free from violence. This is a modest proposal in face of these staggering statistics, but it is a beginning toward ending the cycle of violence. We must act now. I would hope that we would adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, Mr. MILLER, because I think it is a very important step in providing the shelter resources needed to deal with this most terrible problem.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the family violence amendment.

During the last 2 years, the incidence of spouse abuse has increased dramatically. The National League of Cities and the U.S. Conference of Mayors reports that the incidence of assaults upon wives has become so pervasive in our society that half of all wives will experience some form of spouse inflicted violence during their marriage regardless of race of socioeconomic status. However, statistics surrounding spouse abuse continue to remain unclear because the majority of cases of abuse go unreported. In fact, in 1980, the Office of Domestic Violence, which I might add, no longer exists as a result of budget reductions, noted that only 1 in 10 cases of spouse abuse is ever reported to the authorities. And until recently, law enforcement officials did not even keep statistics on those reported cases.

In response to this growing problem, our subcommittee has devoted a considerable amount of time to investigating the extent and severity of family violence. We have received testimony from advocates for victims, police officials, private, nonprofit organizations, and former victims and abusers. We have also visited several domestic violence centers to learn more about the current situation, and services being made available to victims and their families.

The No. 1 concern surfacing from these discussions and site visits has been the need for funding to insure that women and their children have a place to seek refuge from their abuser. During 1981-82, the Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence alone documented over 8,000 victims and children who were turned away from shelters due to lack of space. This is particularly alarming when you consider that women seek shelter only as a last resort—when they have absolutely no other place to turn.

We have found that shelters not only provide the safe space which is so desperately needed by victims, but they also provide the support which victims need to regain their self-confidence and self-respect. Shelters provide hot-line services where many women can call to discuss their problems and seek assistance in determining what options they have in improving their abusive home environment. Child care and counseling for the victim's children is also provided in many shelters. Responding to reports that about 65 percent of the battered women return to their abusive partners, many shelters have attempted to expand their services to include abuser programs. One shelter in my district has managed to gain enough community support that they are now able to provide schooling for children while they are at the shelter. However, providing these services requires money, and shelter services vary according to funding available. The subcommittee has received testimony that in many instances lack of adequate funding has not only limited the number of women that can be accommodated but it has forced a number of valuable projects to close their doors. Many shelters are having a difficult time in covering operating costs due to the funding constraints. Although 29 States have appropriated State funds to assist victims of family violence, the funding is still largely unmet. I might add, that contrary to the administration's position, very little, if any of the $2.7 billion social service block grant money has been able to be directed toward victim services since the amount which States receive is not even adequate to cover many of their already existing social service activities.

In September of this year, Attorney General William French Smith cited the need for the Federal Government to take a leading role in the area of family violence. In taking this leading role I urge my colleagues to support this amendment which will help to insure the survival of these most valuable projects which help to rebuild the lives of victims and their families.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BLILEY TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF CALIFORNIA

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLILEY to the amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of California. Strike out "shelter and other assistance" wherever it appears and insert in lieu thereof "shelter and related assistance".

In section 303(2)(A) insert "(including religious and charitable organizations, and voluntary associations)" after "nonprofit private organizations".

In section 303(a)(2)(A) insert "in order to prevent future violent incidents" immediately before the semicolon at the end of such subparagraph.

In section 303(a)(2)(B)(ii) insert ", and those which provide counseling, alcohol and drug abuse treatment, and self-help services to abusers and victims" immediately before the semicolon at the end of such clause.

In section 303(a)(2), strike out "and" at the end of subparagraph (G), strike out the period at the end of subparagraph (H) and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon, and after subparagraph (H) insert the following new subparagraphs:

(I) provide assurances that any project for which a grant is made under this subsection will not—

(i) require a minimum length of stay for shelter residents; or

(ii) censor mail or telephone calls of shelter residents, or interfere in any way with reconciliation efforts, unless requested to do so by the resident; and

(J) within one year after receipt of funds under this subsection, certify to the Secretary that the State has a procedure for the eviction of an abusing spouse from a shared residence.

In section 303 insert at the end thereof the following new subsection:

(b) Funds provided under this section may be used to provide shelter and related assistance to victims of violence by individuals with whom they reside, provided that victims of family violence are first served.

In section 305(b)(3)(A) insert "(particularly the prevention of repeated incidents of violence)" after "prevention of family violence".

In section 306 insert ", particularly in relation to repeated incidents of family violence" immediately before the period at the end of such section.

In section 307(1)(B) strike out "or against another individual with whom such person is or was residing in a relationship of husband and wife".

In section 307, insert after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph (and redesignate the subsequent paragraph accordingly):

(5) The term "related assistance" means—

(A) food, clothing, child care, transportation, and emergency medical care for victims of family violence and their dependents; and

(B) counseling, alcohol and drug abuse treatment, and self-help services to abusers, victims, and dependents in family violence situations.

Mr. BLILEY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, we all understand that family violence is a serious and growing problem. The damage to individuals and to society cannot be measured in dollars and cents; it is truly incalculable.

Thus, I would support a program for the prevention of family violence if it cost two or three times what the proposal of the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) costs; that is, if I believed that it would really provide a solution.

I support the idea of a Federal family violence program, but I also have a substantial amendment which I would make to the proposal of the gentleman from California in order that it better direct funds to the actual prevention of family violence.

As it now stands, 75 percent of the funds for grants under this amendment must go to shelters for victims of family violence. My amendment would open up that funding to counseling and other prevention services for victims and their families. I do this because of my own experience with organizations such as Parents Anonymous and Parents United, which have done an outstanding job in the area of self-help and counseling to stop family violence. I think it is wrong for us to despair of finding solutions to family violence and spend 75 percent of our resources on nonsolutions.

My amendment will require that States receiving grants under this act have procedures for the eviction of an abusing spouse from a residence shared with the victim. Forty States already have such procedures, and I believe that any State which is serious about helping victims of family violence ought to have them. The use of protection orders and eviction procedures ought to be encouraged.

Only a small percentage of women who come to shelters need to remove themselves from their homes in order to be safe. For these, shelter must be provided. But for the great majority, it would be far better for the woman to remain at home and the husband to leave. It is far more comfortable for the woman, and certainly more equitable, that she be allowed to stay in her own house and in her own neighborhood. This is especially true when children are involved.

Yet, if we provide millions of dollars to shelters and neglect to do anything to promote the use of protection orders and eviction procedures, we will only reinforce the senseless notion that it is the victim who must always leave home, while the abuser stays.

When the use of a shelter is needed, it is important that the rights of the victim be acknowledged and protected. My amendment will insure that immediate emergency shelter be provided by all shelters under this program, and it will prevent coercive and unnecessary invasions of the privacy of the residents of shelters. It will help to insure freedom of choice for victims of family violence by specifying that religious and charitable organizations are to be included among the organizations receiving grants under this program.

Further, it will define services to be provided by shelters, so that we can avoid as much as possible the problem of having this money spent in ways we never intended.

Let me add at this point that, after discussions with several persons, I have decided to add transportation to the list of services included in the amendment that was printed in the RECORD yesterday.

The primary purpose of the amendment is to turn the Family Violence, Prevention and Services Act into something which better deserves the name. This act needs more emphasis on family, more emphasis on prevention, and more emphasis on services for the whole family.

It would be false to say that a proposal which defines the family to include persons who used to live together is a family-centered proposal. We do not need to redefine the family in order to get the job done. My amendment changes the proposed definition and replaces it with something we all might find a little more comfortable. It does this, let me add, without denying any of the services to any persons who would be served by the Miller amendment. I do not want to deny services to anyone. I just do not think that it is in order to serve those persons we have to subvert our understanding of what a family is.

Finally, counseling, treatment, and other prevention services should be available to the whole family. Most women who go to a shelter end up returning to their husbands, only to be abused again. It is obvious that the abuser needs counseling more than anyone else, and it is equally obvious that if an abused spouse wishes to return to her husband, then the abuser needs counseling for the good of both.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BLILEY was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, we should not fall prey to the notion that the solution to family violence is the breakup of the family or that we have done our best for victims of family violence by merely providing them with shelter. Organizations such as Parents Anonymous and Parents United, with 1,400 chapters across the United States, have shown us that the battle against family violence can be won if we are just willing to put our resources and energies in the right places.

I am convinced that real solutions to the problem of family violence will be found if solutions are what we are looking for. But one thing is certain: Solutions will never be found if we do not seek them.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that my colleagues will support my amendment.

Mr. Chairman, just today I received a copy of the letter sent to the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) by several organizations. In fact, I will read the names at this time: The Association of Junior Leagues; the Child Welfare League of America; the Council of Jewish Federations; Family Service America; the National Association of Social Workers; the National Conference of Catholic Charities; and United Way of America.

These organizations agree with me that the Miller amendment is a good idea, but that it needs several alterations to make it work properly. In fact, I could hardly have made a better case for my own amendment than they did. Their chief concern is that the Miller amendment is too narrow in focus. That is my chief concern, too. They say they had hoped the amendment would—and I quote—"allow for more community integration, broader funding objectives, and a more family-oriented focus."

Mr. Chairman, I include the letter at the end of my remark, as follows:

FAMILY SERVICE AMERICA,
Washington, D.C., January 30, 1984.

Hon. GEORGE MILLER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN MILLER: The undersigned organizations met with several staff persons on Tuesday, January 17th, to dicuss the Family Violence Prevention and Services Amendment to H.R. 1904. We met to express our interest in having a broader focus incorporated into the legislation which would allow for more community integration, broader funding objectives, and a more family-oriented focus.

Many suggestions and recommendations were made during this meeting. Due to shortness of time, however, we have limited our focus to four key recommendations for additional wording or change in the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act and/or its preamble which we hope you will be able to accommodate. As we understand floor procedure, two of the recommendations outlined below could be included in the colloquy on the floor and two would require an amendment, presumably by Congressman Austin Murphy, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Select Education, to whom this letter will also be sent.

Item I: The two additions below are recommended to be added to the "Findings Section" of the bill's preamble. We are advised that the preamble will be read on the floor of the House when H.R. 1904 is under consideration.

A. Sec. 302(a)(4) now reads: "family violence is a complex problem affecting families from all social and economic backgrounds"; we would like to add: "and has long term behavioral consequences for both this generation and the next and for society at large. Children in violent families often grow up to become adults who inflict violence on their own children and spouses".

B. Also needed is a new and separate finding which might most appropriately be inserted following (4) to become a new number (5)—and changing all item numbering that follows. The new (5) would read as follows: "a significant number of abused spouses who may not seek shelter protection remain in the home with their family and may need appropriate services within that context to assist the family in overcoming the problems causing the violent behavior. These services may include direct assistance for the abuser to prevent continued violence."

Item II: Two other recommendations relate to the amendment as printed in the Congressional Record on October 27, 1983, Section 303(g), page H 8781. This section targets the funding narrowly, provides only for shelters and limited services to be provided in the shelters, and is silent about the needs of other spouse abuse victims in the community who may choose to remain with their families.

Therefore, we recommend the following language be adopted as indicated below:

A. Section 303 (a): "The Secretary shall assure that not less than 75 per centum of the funds distributed under subsections (a) or (b) of this section shall be distributed to entities for the purpose of providing necessary services to assist victims and families experiencing the problem of spouse abuse. These services can include shelters and related services and services to victims who remain in their homes with their families. (Italic section has been added).

B. Section 307, page H 8781, would be improved if a number (6) were added to define services under this legislation to read as follows: "The term "services" under this legislation means those services that may be necessary to assist a victim and the victim's family, including the children and the abusing spouse, whether the victim is living in a shelter or at home. These services may include the following: shelters, training to improve intervention within criminal justice systems, community and public education, crisis hotlines, medical and social services, counseling and education programs for abusers, services for intact families experiencing problems of spouse abuse, and information and referral.

The above four recommendations conclude our comment on the family violence amendment. We hope that you find them helpful and that you and Congressman Murphy will incorporate our recommendations into the legislation on the floor of the House.

Thanking you for your time and attention,

Sincerely,

PATRICIA A. LANGLEY,
Director, FSA Office on Governmental Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. MILLER of California, and by unanimous consent, Mr. BLILEY was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLILEY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) for his support and for his amendment. I would just like to ask him a couple of questions with respect to the amendment.

The first is in terms of who may be provided services under the gentleman's amendment. It is my understanding, after some discussion with the gentleman, that he would not prohibit shelters from providing services to individuals who were not married; is that correct?

Mr. BLILEY. That is exactly correct. What my amendment would say is that, all things being equal, the shelter would have to recognize family members first because it is harder for them to move out of the home than it is for people who do not have the formal bonds. But if it is an emergency situation and the shelter determines that the person who is not from the family has a more pressing problem, then certainly that would take precedence because that would not be an equal situation.

Mr. MILLER of California. Then the gentleman would in no way require a shelter to take somebody out who was already there because a married woman or spouse who also had been the subject of family violence showed up?

Mr. BLILEY. Absolutely not.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further clarification of that point?

Mr. BLILEY. I believe it is my time, and I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just wondered, how are we going to determine it? Are we not throwing an unusual burden upon the shelters to determine the marital or family status of abused persons who come out of a home?

Mr. MILLER of California. I think that is the concern that I have.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, if I may reclaim my time, in most instances they would have one person or one family arriving at a time, and they would be able to take the situation into control. But in the case where the home had room for but one person, we will say, and two arrive at the same time—one is a wife and the other is a person who had a living arrangement or a former living arrangement with someone—then the wife would take precedence. That is all my amendment says.

Mr. MURPHY. Well, suppose we had a situation where the home was filled and one of the inmates or one of the residents happens to not be able to prove her marital status and then a woman who comes up with her marriage license shows up; can she bump her and say, "Well, I have priority"?

Mr. BLILEY. No, the people who are already there could not be bumped. We are talking about new situations.

Mr. MURPHY. That is not what the amendment says, however.

Mr. BLILEY. That might be the gentleman's interpretation, but it is not mine.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, that is the point we are trying to clarify.

I think the author of the amendment, the gentleman from Virginia, has clarified it, that this is not a mandate to only take married women.

In another part of the gentleman's amendment, in terms of the definition of related services, again he is not mandating that the shelter-based programs offer these services; he is saying that they may offer these services as part of a comprehensive program to try to prevent recurring family violence. But it is not a mandate that each shelter must offer these counseling and other programs; is that correct?

Mr. BLILEY. That is correct.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his clarifying comments.

Mr. HANSEN of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I support Mr. BLILEY's amendment to the Miller amendment on family violence because it corrects two important definitional problems within the amendment. First is the problem that the services which would be provided by the shelters funded under this proposal are left completely undefined. The second is a redefinition of the family which I am sure that few of us could agree to.

If we are going to be funding these shelters up to 80 percent in the first year and 66 percent by the third year, it seems to me that we ought to have a better idea where this money is going. There are big differences in the costs and services offered by shelters. In the 1980 Senate hearings on this subject, one witness from Peoria compared the two shelters which served her local area. The first, a 55-year-old, privately funded shelter served 1,785 women and children in the previous year, with a budget of $160,000. The second, a 2-year-old affiliate of the Illinois Coalition Against Domestic Violence, served 367 women and children with a budget of $150,000. It is interesting to note by the way, that the first shelter, a nondenominational organization called the South Side Mission, has never received a penny from Federal, State, or local government. The second shelter, on the other hand, Tri-County Womenstrength, received 80 percent of its funds from the Federal Government.

Why should one shelter serve one-fourth the number of persons for about the same cost? I do not know the answer to that question in specific terms, but it seems to me that the question is well worth examining. One explanation is that different shelters offer different kinds of services. In 1978, there was a proposal in Tennessee which would allow State-funded shelters to pay for the educatoin of a victim of domestic violence up to the degree of doctorate. This proposal was of course made in the interests of helping women to regain self-sufficiency after breaking from a violent family situation, and I have no argument with that. But I do think that the example points to a need for us to define within our own proposal just exactly what are the services which the Federal Government intends to fund under this program.

The Bliley amendment does this. It defines the services provided by shelters to include food, clothing, shelter, child care, counseling, alcohol and drug abuse treatment, and self-help services. I believe that this definition is quite broad enough to include whatever emergency and preventative services that we have in mind, while at the same time avoiding the funding of those proposals that we never intended, and for this reason, I support it.

Further, there is a second definitional problem corrected by the Bliley amendment. The Miller amendment, as it now stands, would include in the definition of family violence many situations which none of us would call family. The Bliley amendment does not exclude persons in those situations from services. It simply clarifies the definition of family—turns it back into something we can all recognize—and gives priority to the victims of family violence. It recognizes, as I am sure we all do, the special situation of those who suffer violence at the hands of persons to whom they are bound by commitments of marriage and family, and acknowledges their special tragedy. With this provision of the Bliley amendment I wholeheartedly agree, and I hope that you will join with me in support of it.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. I want to commend the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) for bringing this to us. I think it is a worthy effort; however, I think the Bliley amendment is a further refinement of that effort and adds something that the amendment does not have.

Primarily, in my opinion, the strength of the Bliley amendment is that it begins to deal with the problem of how do we go about preventing some of the problems that we are dealing with. If one thing came through to this Member in our many, many hearings and from the many experts we heard testify before the Select Committee on Children, Youth and Family, it was the fact that we are continually playing catchup with treating the problems that exist.

We need to start thinking and focusing on how do we prevent the problems from happening in the first place. The Bliley amendment in a number of ways deals with that question and brings to us a mechanism whereby we can start the process of trying to prevent the situtation from occurring.

Now, we have a long way to go on that and I am not pretending that we should swing totally to the preventive side and forget the treatment side. We do need to provide funds for treatment. We do need to provide facilities for treatment; but we also need to look at the prevention aspect and the Bliley amendment does that.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COATS. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

I rise in support of the Bliley amendment and commend the gentleman from California for his work. I think the Bliley amendment refines this thing and deals with the question exactly as the gentleman was saying, the question of prevention.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of Representative BLILEY's amendment to the reauthorization bill of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act."

The title of this bill dictates that congressional action in regard to family violence should provide prevention strategies that work to keep families together and eliminate violent behavior patterns rather than encourage separation. Dissolving the family unit is only an alternative, not a solution. A former director of a shelter in my district observed that most women want their husbands to be helped. They do not want to be rid of their husbands, they just want to be rid of the beatings. Currently, programs are not designed to assist husbands.

The move to a shelter tends to further traumatize an already emotional traumatic situation. At least 60 percent of the women who leave shelters return to situations which are essentially unaltered. Families should be able to get help which Mr. BLILEY's proposal emphasizes and proper treatment can enhance working relationships vital to maintaining the integrity of family units.

Mr. BLILEY's amendment places emphasis on prevention of repeat instances of family violence and provides needed services to those families with histories of violence. This amendment provides the same amount of funding as the Miller amendment and while focusing on preventive programs which can arrest problems before they are transferred to the next generation, it also provides systems whereby families have a better chance of working out their problems and staying together.

I support efforts to provide assistance to victims of family violence, but shelters are a matter of last resort. While recognizing the need for shelters this amendment goes one step further to help families before the last resort becomes the only option left. I urge other Members to examine the intent of this amendment and support this initiative.

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) and in opposition to the amendment by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY). I applaud the efforts of Congressman MILLER in drafting provisions for inclusion in H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Amendments of 1983, that will offer help to millions of battered women and children, through providing assistance for shelters and community-based prevention and services programs. The amendment to MILLER's provisions that has been offered by the gentleman from Virginia, I believe, is seriously flawed. I believe that my colleagues who have authored or may be in support of the Bliley amendment have been misinformed, and I would like to take this opportunity to share with you some realities about victims of family violence and their needs.

By seeking to direct money away from the provision of shelter for battered women, the Bliley amendment fails to recognize that, first and foremost, battered women need safety from the immediate threat of abuse, which often means that the battered woman must seek shelter for herself and her children outside the home for a while. Eviction orders that remove the batterer from the home are insufficient, by themselves, to prevent further abuse because police in many communities have neither the resources nor the training to enforce the laws adequately. Furthermore, in many cases, the batterer returns to his home despite efforts to enforce eviction orders.

The Bliley amendment fails to recognize that, in most cases, a shelter for battered women is not just a bed and a roof over the woman's head, but that shelters provide a variety of prevention and treatment services that the battered woman and her family desperately need—counseling, legal advocacy, programs for children, and referrals to other organizations—and are instrumental in many communities in helping social service, criminal justice, and medical professionals to develop appropriate responses to victims and their families. Indeed, one out of every two shelters around the country also coordinate efforts to help the battered woman and her children with counseling programs for men who batter.

By seeking to narrow the definition of family violence to exclude couples who live or have lived together as husband and wife, the Bliley amendment fails to recognize the reality that violence between individuals living together may occur both before and after marriage. Why should we require that a couple living together in a violent relationship be married before they or their children can receive help?

I therefore urge my colleagues to support the Miller amendment and reject the amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY).

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, as a cosponsor of the family violence prevention and services amendment I rise to urge its adoption.

The amendment offered by our distinguished colleague, Chairman MILLER, authorizes $65 million through fiscal year 1987 for State grants to support family violence prevention programs and to shelter victims of family violence. Seventy-five percent of the funds are designated for use by shelters. Grant recipients must provide a local match, half of which must be derived from private sources. Thus, this amendment clearly will supplement local and private efforts to aid family violence victims.

The need for this amendment dispels the myth that spouse and child abuse is a problem peculiar to the poor. Rather family violence infects all social, racial, and economic classes. Husbands beat their wives; wives attack their husbands; and parents abuse their children. This phenomenon is so perverse, so seemingly out of control, that Time magazine says "there is no place so violent as home."

Just how violent our homes are is difficult to determine. Statistics on public violence—that is, the number of murders, robberies, and assaults—are kept by the Department of Justice. Incidents of public violence are normally reported and, because they are reported, the Justice Department's statistics are reliable. But comparatively few reports of family violence are reported to law enforcement authorities, so tallying incidents of family violence is still an imprecise science.

For example, although the American Humane Association found that reports of child abuse to State and local authorities doubled between 1976 and 1981, it is believed that well over half of such crimes are never reported. Estimates are that 1.5 million children this year will be victimized by child abuse. A child may be physically or sexually abused by a parent, stepparent, or intimate friend of a single parent.

This year more than 6 million wives will be pummeled by their husbands, and as many as 4,000 of them will be beaten to death. Something which may come as a surprise to many of us is that 282,000 men this year will be battered by their wives. And even though law enforcement officials now spend one-third of their time responding to domestic violence cases, perhaps as much as two-thirds of their time could be consumed in responding to family violence if its victims felt more secure in coming forward.

One statistic associated with family violence is clear: Organizations, both public and private, that assist victims of domestic violence are effective, but there are not enough of them to help the number of victims. Virtually all of the domestic violence shelters, of which there are 800 in the United States, have extensive waiting lists. The YWCA, which operates 210 domestic shelters or related programs, believes it is turning away 80 percent of those in need of help.

I submit to my colleagues, and especially to those who may consider rising in opposition to this amendment, that an abused child or spouse cannot afford the agony of being placed on a waiting list or being turned away. The alternatives for a victim who is refused treatment are few. He or she can run away or return to a home of violence, neglect, and abuse.

Domestic violence is self-perpetuating. Abused children become abusive parents. A child who grows up in a home where one parent batters the other grows up believing that violence is a constructive method of exerting control and keeping order. Is it at all surprising that 90 percent of prison inmates surveyed say that they were abused as children?

No matter how one looks at it, this amendment is justified. More domestic violence programs and shelters are needed to assist victims. Law enforcement agencies need funds to train police officers and other personnel who may be called upon to handle victims or perpetrators of family violence. From a cost/benefit perspective, this amendment would help alleviate the incidence of a crime that is out of control and, perhaps, over the long-run reduce the taxpayers' expense for supporting incarcerated criminals.

I call on my colleagues to join me in supporting this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER).

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BIAGGI TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF CALIFORNIA, AS AMENDED

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIAGGI to the amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of California, as amended: After section 306 insert the following new section (and redesignate the subsequent sections accordingly):

DISCRIMINATION PROHIBITED

SEC. 307. (a) The Secretary shall not provide financial assistance for any program under this title unless the grant, contract, or agreement with respect to such program specifically provides that no individual with responsibilities in the operation of such program will discriminate unlawfully with respect to any such program because of race, creed, belief, color, national origin, sex, age, handicap, or political affiliation.

(b) No individual in the United States shall on the ground of sex be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, be subjected to discrimination under, or be denied employment in connection with, any program or activity receiving assistance under this title. Nothing in this title shall require any such program to include any individual in any program or activity without taking into consideration that individual's sex in those certain instances where sex is a bona fide occupational qualification or programmatic factor reasonably necessary to the normal operation of that particular program or activity. The Secretary shall enforce the provisions of the preceding sentence in accordance with section 602 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C 2000d-1). Section 603 of such Act (42 U.S.C 2000d-2) shall apply with respect to any action taken by the Secretary to enforce such sentence. This section shall not be construed as affecting any other legal remedy.

In section 308(1)(B) (as so redesignated) insert "(including elderly family members)" after "related".

Mr. BIAGGI (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member of the Committee on Education and Labor for his courtesy, as always.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer what I consider to be a complimentary amendment to the major amendment offered by my friend and colleague GEORGE MILLER. In his amendment, which I am proud to cosponsor, $65 million in funds are authorized for State grants to support programs to prevent family violence and to provide immediate shelter to victims of family violence. My amendment simply insures that no discrimination on the basis of race, creed, belief, color, national origin, sex handicap or political affiliation is practiced by any of those receiving grants under this section.

The most critical feature of this amendment is to insure that there is also no discrimination on the basis of age in these programs so that victims of elder abuse are provided with the same access to shelters as other groups.

I offer this amendment as an original member of the House Select Committee on Aging which has spent extensive time looking into the problem of abuse against the elderly in the family setting. Our committee's research and others point to the fact that it does exist and is in fact a burgeoning national scandal. It takes many forms ranging from straight physical abuse to psychological abuse including starvation and deprivation of needs to material abuse to coerced entry into nursing homes. We learned that the average victim is a 75-year-old woman in poor health. We also learn that like all other forms of family violence—it too often goes unreported. The Miller amendment seeks to provide a real approach toward a solution to the problem. The Biaggi amendment seeks to guarantee that a victim of family violence does not have to endure the dual indignity of being denied entrance into a shelter on the basis of age.

I offer this amendment after having conducted an informal survey of domestic violence shelters in some 27 States and a disturbing number of them did not provide any services to victims of elder abuse. Some said so because they had limited resources—others because they were not aware of what constituted an elder abuse victim.

It is tragic that we have a nation where intergenerational abuse against family members is so prevalent. If it affects all age groups—then our solutions must be available to them as well. I urge support of my amendment to the Miller amendment and of course passage of this critical amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. BIAGGI) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) as amended.

The amendment to the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. RINALDO TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF CALIFORNIA, AS AMENDED.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr Chairmen, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RINALDO to the amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of California, as amended: In section 309(a), insert ", in consultation with the Administration on Aging and the National Institute on Aging," after "Secretary".

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RINALDO. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I asked the gentleman to yield to direct this parliamentary inquiry to the Chair.

How much time is remaining under the time limitation?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. RINALDO. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer an amendment to amend section 309 of the Miller amendment to H.R. 1904—legislation which I strongly support. As ranking minority member of the Select Committee on Aging.

I believe it is important for Congress to require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to consult and cooperate with both the Administration on Aging and the National Institute on Aging in conducting its study of elder abuse and in issuing legislative recommendations as mandated by this section.

The Administration on Aging, Mr. Chairman, is the sole Federal agency charged with advocacy on behalf of, and coordination of services to, the Nation's elderly.

AOA and its network of State and area agencies on aging are vital links in the effort to reach and serve elder abuse victims.

On the national level, AOA has funded three model projects to develop and demonstrate alternative methods for prevention and treatment of elder abuse.

I brought the Aging Committee to my own State of New Jersey in 1980 for a hearing on this subject. Even then the New Jersey Division on Aging had begun outreach to older individuals needing help. In November 1983 the division on aging and Kean College in Union, N.J., helped sponsor a major conference on elder abuse. And a study just released by the New Jersey Division on Aging and Youth and Family Services stresses the need for more concentrated national research on the nature of elder abuse and greater intergovernmental cooperation.

While the National Institute on Aging has not been involved, elder abuse research is clearly within the purview of its behavior sciences research program.

This amendment specifically recognizes the crucial role the Administration on Aging and the aging network are playing, and the role the National Institute on Aging could play, in combating the pitiful problem of elder abuse.

I want to thank the manager of the bill, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY), and my distinguished colleagues, the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER), and the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR), who is really the legislative pioneer on this subject, as well as the gentleman from New York (Mr. BIAGGI) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ERLENBORN) for their consideration of this amendment. I urge its adoption.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. RINALDO) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER), as amended.

The amendment to the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the Miller amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hate to rain on this Miller parade that has had so much sunshine so much of the time this afternoon, almost exclusively sunshine. But let me just suggest first of all I am not in favor of spousal abuse. I want to make that clear from the outset.

My opposition to the Miller amendment is that we already have social services block grants funneling $2.5 billion of Federal funds into the State and local governments where they, in their discretion, may use them for the very purposes set forth in this new categorical aid program.

The cost of this program, as I compute it, over the authorized life of the program, the period of years where it is authorized is $65 million. We are going to add this to the $2.5 billion already made available through block grants.

A little while ago this Committee, in its wisdom, adopted the Marriott amendment, which by chance also happened to add up to approximately $65 million over the life of the bill. I point out that the bill as reported by the committee during its effective life was less than $120 million, so with the adoption of these two little amendments we are going to more than double the cost of this bill.

I have to reiterate, Mr. Chairman, when we spend a half an hour to an hour every day with 1-minute speeches out of the well, with people from both sides of the aisle decrying the horrible deficits that are facing this country, and then have those very same people come here on the floor during committee consideration to offer amendments creating new programs, adding spending on top of the spending we already have for the same purposes already capable of being served, it just makes you wonder is there a real note of sincerity to those who are crying out against the deficits.

I guess it is easy to be against deficits and for all of the individual spending programs. As a matter of fact, this Congress has been doing it for so long it seems to have become a habit.

But we are never going to control the deficit, we are never going to get that so-called down payment on deficit control from either side of the aisle if we continue acting in this irresponsible manner.

So I would suggest that this amendment be defeated, that we allow the States in their discretion to use block grant moneys to provide this service, which they can do today, and have been able to do since the block grant was created.

And I am serving notice that I intend to ask for a separate vote on the Marriott amendment when we get to the House, hoping that maybe on the record vote we can overturn the adoption of that amendment. Then we can cut what would be more than half of the total of this bill with the amendments back to the original expenditure level approved by the committee. So I would just make that observation, Mr. Chairman, and yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in opposition to the Miller amendment.

Mr. Chairman, like my distinguished colleague from Illinois, I would note that it is difficult, as on the last one, to rise in opposition to a nice sounding title of an amendment that would purport to help prevent a problem which is so emotional and so difficult and so pervasive in this country. Who can be against the prevention of family violence?

I would note for the House that this gentleman has a long-time commitment to that prevention. I have acted in my own city to help create a shelter for the prevention of family violence. It was difficult to create, but we have now one of the models and one of the more successful ones in the country.

But, Mr. Chairman, just because family violence is a difficult problem and is one that has to be addressed, the decision this House has to make is what it is we should do about it. Just because it is a title in which everyone wants to get on record to up the ante, and to add more money, the question becomes what is the best strategy and at what level of government that strategy should be pursued.

What the amendment that is before us today does is to add, let us just say it, another Federal program at this time, a Federal program to create domestic violence shelters throughout this country. That may sound attractive until you begin to look at the facts, and one of the facts—and we will go through them—is that we have successfully added and built in this country approximately 700 shelters for domestic violence in the past 10 years without this new Federal program.

I would submit to you that it may sound attractive, but the Miller amendment is the wrong approach. I would suggest to the House there are three problems with the amendment before us that this House has to think about very clearly.

The first one is money. The first one is the deficit. That is the unemployment rate and the risk of continuing to throw more money out of the Federal deficits which are already at the $180 billion annual category, and already Members of this House go to that floor microphone and in the well day after day and they decry that deficit and question the sincerity of the White House or the sincerity of the leadership at one level or another. Yet they would come back and add to that deficit one bill at a time, one title at a time.

And in this case, after this House, after the committee added 73 percent to the Federal program in 1 year, then the Marriott amendment added more to make it a 196-percent increase.

Now, this amendment would add another 100 percent approximately for a 396-percent increase for the first year, and continuing that program for years to come.

I would suggest that throwing more money and adding more money and creating another Federal program is the wrong approach. Of course, the danger is when you continue to add to the Federal deficit you create higher interest rates, higher unemployment, and higher inflation, and the higher unemployment that indeed, as per the words of the bill itself, could end up causing more domestic violence and more child abuse, exactly what we are trying to prevent.

Mr. Chairman, there is a second problem which is much more specific. The first problem you could talk about with any new Federal spending progam, and it seems as if in spite of the cries against the deficit we get to talk about new Federal spending programs almost every day. But the second problem is very specific, and that is we had one hearing on this bill and we discovered through that one hearing and from further information that was sent to this Congress that over the last 10 years in excess of 700 shelters have been created. They have been created the hard way, through community involvement, through private involvement, through charitable contributions, through the United Way, through city councils such as my own, through State action, through local government actions. But they have been created and we have gone from virtually zero to 700 in less than 10 years.

Sure, it was difficult. But the result is that those shelters are locally designed to meet local problems. They have the highest level of community support and in each shelter there are contributions of thousands of hours of volunteer hours per week.

That is what we face today, is the danger of short circuiting that process, which is successful. We indeed could end up with fewer shelters if we tell the people of this country that it is the Federal Government that is going to solve it, and that leads to problem No. 3.

Problem No. 3 is that the permanent funding of what should be a rather simple amendment of new Federal shelters requires or will require, and there is no way it can be avoided because we have just added more definitions with the Bliley amendment, which I supported, but we have added definition after definition, regulation after regulation, and we have taken shelters that otherwise could be completely locally designed, and not just a scarcity of Federal regulations, but an absence of those regulations, and we have added three pages of statutes and no telling how many pages of regulations when finally implemented.

So I would suggest to the House that if we want to be for the prevention of domestic violence and for lowered unemployment we should vote no on this new Federal spending program.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MS. OAKAR TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF CALIFORNIA, AS AMENDED

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I offer two amendments to the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

Ms. OAKAR (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

□ 1600

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, first of all, I would like to commend Mr. MILLER and all the individuals responsible, the chairmen of the subcommittee and the full committee, for their work on the issue of family violence.

This is an issue long ignored by this Congress and the few dollars here are a pittance as compared with the cost overruns of the defense projects. This issue is a very, very worthwhile one and will prevent pain which exists with our men, women, and children and our elderly who really do experience violence and abuse.

I would like to focus in on the subject of elder abuse. It is true that I have a comprehensive bill on this subject and it is also true that we estimate that 1 out of 20 older Americans are victims of elder abuse. They are victims of a form of family violence that includes physical and psychological and verbal assault, and forceable restraint, isolation, exploitation of their money or property, neglect, failure to provide for physical and health needs including abuse by medication.

Now, we as a Congress have not addressed ourselves to what is a very subtle, often not talked about difficulty, and that is the subject of elder abuse. We know that only one out of six of these cases that relate to elder abuse is ever reported. We know that elderly are very often embarrassed to tell anybody and are afraid to tell anybody that they are being abused.

We also know that often, most often, the abuser, unfortunately, is the child of that elderly person. We know that there are many reasons for elder abuse: lack of congregate services to help the child take care of that frail, elderly person, high unemployment, and other psychological problems which take place.

We also know that we do not have a National Center on Elder Abuse within the Department of Health and Human Services, just as we have a clearinghouse for child abuse, et cetera.

So one of the amendments would establish this National Center on Elder Abuse within HHS. It would conduct research into the causes and national incidents, the prevention and the treatment of elder abuse which is a serious problem.

Mr. Chairman, the Center would also serve as a clearinghouse disseminating information about programs and the special problems related to elder abuse.

Although elder abuse has been identified as one of the most growing problems and concerns of the older American population, little information and research has been released.

My amendment would centralize the process and attempts to identify and define the problem.

My other amendment calls for a study to be conducted by the Secretary of HHS on the necessity and the effects of mandatory reporting on family abuse cases.

Elder abuse protection laws have not been a priority item in many areas. Mandating protective services for elder adults is more difficult sometimes than for children. Laws must safeguard adults' rights to privacy, consent, and determination. Mandatory reporting is controversial, so I think we ought to study that problem.

We also know one of the reasons why people do not report elder abuse, such as caseworkers, doctors, nurses, who work in emergency rooms in hospitals, is because they are not immune from prosecution. So we can give the example of the 81-year-old woman who was brought in by her daughter and son-in-law, into an emergency room. They told the physician that she had fallen and sustained these injuries.

This individual, 81 years old, had a fractured skull. The doctor, the nurse, the caseworker, all suspected that it was the daughter and son-in-law who had perpetrated those injuries, but they had concerns about immunity because people who report cases such as elder abuse and child abuse can often get sued.

So I think we have to study the problems of the immunity, and that is what my second amendment relates to.

I personally feel we would be better off.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Ms. OAKAR was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, the city of Cleveland was one of the first to conduct a study on elder abuse. The Cleveland Chronic Illness Center and Case Western Reserve University did the study on elder abuse in 1979 and showed extensive elder abuse.

Another study released in Cuyahoga County, done by the Federation of Community Planning, was released in 1982 and found that 10 percent of the dependent elderly in the country were victims of elder abuse.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage in a colloquy with Congressman MILLER.

Congressman MILLER, am I correct in assuming that the family Violence Prevention and Services Act provides for a small amount of money, in the form of grants, to shelters?

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. OAKAR. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Yes, the gentlewoman is correct. Section 303 of the amendment provides for grants to be given to States which house shelter center victims of abuse.

Ms. OAKAR. I realize that most shelters provide assistance to battered wives and their dependents. However, a shelter would never turn away a victim because of age or sex or national origin?

Mr. MILLER of California. The Congresswoman is correct. I think with the Biaggi amendment, which she is a supporter of, that part has been strengthened.

Ms. OAKAR. I may conclude, therefore, that the amendment includes the protection and treatment of victims of elder abuse also?

Mr. MILLER of California. The gentlewoman is correct.

Ms. OAKAR. I thank the gentleman.

By the way, the two issues, in fact, several issues related to family violence do not conflict with each other. They are not in competition. we really think there are problems with violence at various levels. That is the importance of the Miller amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman as well as the author of the amendment.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in very strong support of the amendment.

I commend my friend from California for his leadership on this issue.

Mr Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment and commend the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) for his fine work on this issue. A number of us in the House have actively pursued legislative solutions to the tragic problem of domestic violence over the last few years, and adoption of this amendment today will be a major step forward.

This problem is national in scope. It reaches into every community in America. In some local communities, such as in my district in Montgomery County, Md. domestic violence has been recognized as a serious crime and measures have been taken to deal with its causes and to assist its victims. But shelters and counseling services are grossly underfunded.

The Miller amendment will begin to provide the necessary national commitment to protect the safety of individuals and families. It will help increase popular awareness that domestic violence, as well as being a tragedy, is a crime. It will remove the feeling of helplessness that many families faced with this problem have. The amendment deserves the overwhelming endorsement of this House. Action is long overdue.

Mrs. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the amendment offered by Mr. MILLER to the bill H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act, which authorizes $65 million over the next 3 fiscal years for State grants to support programs to prevent family violence and provide immediate shelter to victims of family violence.

I have witnessed in my own district the impressive work of the dedicated individuals who work in shelters for abused women. Over 90 percent of the women who entered the State's shelters last year had a history of being abused before the incident which led them to contact the shelter. Half of the women who entered the shelters were battered by individuals other than their spouse. Many women are battered by husbands from whom they are separated, or by men with whom they are no longer involved, but who continue to harass them.

Statistics in my State show that battering affects the entire family, and occurs in all income groups. Nearly three-fourths of the women who enter the shelters do so with their children, and although close to one-third had jobs of their own, close to one-half were economically dependent on the men who abused them. About one-fifth of the women who entered the shelters were welfare recipients.

Funding sources, in addition to the State of Connecticut (which provides only a portion of any shelter's budget) includes some from private donations, church groups, and private foundations. Most funding, however, is precarious. One shelter, for example, was recently reduced from 12 people to 4 because of Federal cuts, yet the community expected the same level of service from the shelter.

Shelter programs provide high-quality service at a low cost. Prudence Crandall Center in New Britain, for example, can care for a woman and her children for about one-third the cost to house a family at a hotel where there would be no support services. The New Britain City welfare director has said "Without Prudence Crandall women with children would be housed * * * at several times the cost to the city."

Shelters also suffer from lack of space and ability to handle calls. Some estimates are as high as 80 women per month who cannot be sheltered because of lack of space in the shelter in their communities. Some of these women can be placed in other parts of the State, but many have no alternatives. Shelters receive as many as 600 calls per month, calls for crisis service, referrals, information, and advocacy.

I strongly support the provision of the amendment which requires three-fourths of the State funds to go to agencies that provide immediate shelter to family violence victims. I am also pleased that $2 million is earmarked for training programs for law enforcement officials to handle family violence cases.

That violence occurs in families comes as no suprise, sadly enough. Most of us have become accustomed to hearing of stories of children and adults who are beaten by family members. The effects of these incidents of family violence, however, have an impact on our whole society. This syndrome has been our legacy for long enough, and I believe it is time for the Congress to finally address this problem in a real and substantive fashion.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER), as amended.

The amendments to the amendments, as amended, were agreed to.

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to make a technical correction in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. BLILEY). In that amendment, in the second paragraph, I ask unanimous consent to insert "(a)" after "303."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MURPHY TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF CALIFORNIA, AS AMENDED

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MURPHY to the amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of California; as amended: Section 303(a)(2)(B), on page 2, after line 17 of the amendment:

Insert the following new clause after "year, that" (and redesignate the subsequent clauses accordingly):

(i) not more than 5 per centum of such funds will be used for State administrative costs;

Mr. MURPHY. Just a brief explanation, Mr. Chairman. As we know, 25 percent of the funding goes back to the States for State grant money and my amendment would merely provide that the State is not entitled to use any more than one-fifth of that amount for administrative costs and that the remaining four-fifths of the funding would go to encourage the actual programs in existence so that they do not consume all of the money in administrative costs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURPHY) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) as amended.

The amendment to the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments?

● Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of the child abuse amendments and the family violence prevention and services amendment. Domestic violence, whether in the form of child, spouse or elder abuse, is a tragic crime injuring millions of people annually. These amendments support measures to prevent family violence and to provide immediate shelter for the victims.

Child abuse is the most frightening of crimes. It is an attack on helpless victims—infants and children—who cannot know or understand the complex reasons that cause the assault. Even more alarming, child abuse is a violent act committed by a loved one who often does not know the reason for the outburst and may regret it later. Yet, unfortunately, this person will probably repeat the brutal act.

In the safety of their own homes, children suffer physically as well as emotionally. It is the nature of the crime that makes it so very difficult to recognize and prevent. The crime is not defined by race, sex, or income, although it is often aggravated by problems such as unemployment or stress. There are few statistics on child abuse because most of the crimes go unreported. Increasing public awareness of this grave problem is a critical step toward preventing further assaults. Since the first child abuse prevention bill was enacted in 1974, incident reports have risen over 100 percent.

It is a well known fact that child abuse causes more than physical damage; emotional problems stemming from child abuse have lasting effects. Reports indicate that most parents who abuse their children were themselves victims of child abuse.

Passage of H.R. 1904, the child abuse amendments and family violence prevention and service amendment is critical to the welfare of people of all ages. There is no question that solutions to this most serious and complex problem depend on assistance from the Federal Government. Preventive measures, treatment, shelters, and adoption opportunities are vital steps toward protecting our children and families. We must build on the legislative framework to establish appropriate and stronger State, local and Federal activities to prevent family violence and provide help for its many victims. We must not shy away from this responsibility.●

● Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the amendment to H.R. 1904 offered by the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER). I am a cosponsor of this important amendment to provide assistance to the victims of family violence.

Mr. Chairman, family violence is on the rise in America. The cover story in the September 5, 1983, issue of time magazine vividly describes this horrifying national problem. According to the Time article, nearly 6 million wives are abused by their husbands each year, some 2,000 to 4,000 women are beaten to death annually, and the Nation's police spend one-third of their time responding to domestic-violence calls. The article told shocking stories about the pain and suffering that has been inflicted upon thousands of women and children. But the saddest part of many of these stories was that the victims had no place to turn. More than 75 percent of the 650 family violence projects across the Nation have had to reduce services as a result of budget cuts by the Reagan administration. Many victims are simply forced to endure the punishment and in some cases kill their husbands or themselves. There must be another choice. We must make certain that no one who is fleeing from family violence and seeking assistant is turned away. The Miller amendment is a step in that direction.

This amendment authorizes $65 million over the next 3 fiscal years for State grants for shelters and service programs which work with the victims of family violence. At least 75 percent of the State funds must go to agencies that provide immediate shelter to family violence victims. The amendment also authorizes $2 million over the next 3 years for training programs for law enforcement officials to handle family violence cases. Forty percent of all police injuries occur during the response to a domestic complaint. With the proper training, many of these injuries could be prevented.

Mr. Chairman, Congress must respond to this growing national crisis. This amendment will provide the victims of family violence an opportunity to escape a life of abuse.●

● Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California. I would like to commend the gentleman on his fine work on this legislation. Family violence is a problem in our society of alarming dimensions, and it is especially a problem for women. According to Time magazine, battering results in injuries to more women than auto accidents, rapes, or muggings. Fortunately, we no longer accept family violence as a fact of life, nor as a private matter to be left within the confines of the family. Over the last two decades, over 800 shelters for abused women have been created in this country. This legislation would provide much-needed Federal funds to help these shelters.

In Connecticut there are 10 shelters for battered women. In a recent 1 year period, over 2,000 women and children were admitted to these shelters, yet another 2,500 were turned away for lack of space. Hot lines in Connecticut in that same year received nearly 40,000 calls. This is partly a story of success and partly a story of failure. The Connecticut Task Force on Abused Women reports that 82 percent of the women who came through these shelters did not return to the battering situation. This is a significant indication of success. Yet the many women who were turned away represent a failure that might be corrected by the availability of Federal grants. As long as the tragedy of family violence continues, it is vital that we provide what help we can to prevent such violence and to provide help to its victims.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important amendment, and I strongly urge my colleagues to support it.●

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. MILLER) as amended.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. ERLENBORN) there were—ayes 14, noes 1.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Chairman, I was unavoidably absent for rollcall No. 18, the vote on the Miller amendment. If I had been here, I would have voted for it.

□ 1630

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, this bill seems like an old friend to me now. Hopefully you will come to feel the same way about it. I cosponsored this measure early last year and worked with it in committee. After a long delay during which many amendments were considered, I was pleased to appear before the Rules Committee on behalf of this bill last fall. But my work was minor compared to that of my good colleagues on the Education and Labor Committee, Messrs. MURPHY, MILLER, and ERLENBORN. I commend them for their bipartisan efforts. Now we can all join to complete House action on this vital bill reauthorizing and improving the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act.

That is quite a long title, but its needed to capture all this measure addresses. First, the bill reauthorizes and improves our statutory Federal programs designed to reduce the horrors of child abuse. Second, the act helps facilitate adoption. This bill specifically expands that help to include the adoption of severely handicapped children. While both of these elements of the bill are vitally important, I would like to focus on yet another good feature of this legislation: it improves the act's child protection programs by responsibly addressing the grave threats aimed at so-called infants at risk—those youngest members of our society who are left to die without food or care solely because they are handicapped.

This issue arose as the tragic events surrounded Baby Doe came to light. There, a slightly handicapped but easily treated young life was left to die without nutrition or routine medical care because his parents and doctor did not want an allegedly imperfect child. The administration stepped in with a lifesaving hotline to help insure care for other handicapped newborns. Since then, several similar cases have emerged where simple treatment or nutrition was intentionally denied to infants at risk. This is child abuse at its very worst—and is properly addressed here.

The provisions in H.R. 1904 help protect future Baby Does by encouraging responsible State action. Inappropriate measures are not required—just a fair chance for every newborn. I believe these provisions will bolster existing Federal efforts in saving young lives. Those Federal efforts must continue as well.

Let us not be distracted by claims that individuals have the complete discretion to do as they wish with their newborn children. It is a well established fact that when parents seek to deny their children lifesaving medical treatment for religious reasons, doctors and hospitals take them to court and courts order the treatment be given. We should show no less concern for the child when the reason for denying treatment is disrespect for the value of a handicapped human being. A child's right to receive routine, life-sustaining treatment must not be denied for any reason.

We need to protect all children from the very real horrors of child abuse. This goes for infants at risk as well as for other children. A civilized society must protect all its children from any momentary madness. We must take an especially firm stand against the even more insidious horror presented by those who would withhold food and medical care from a newborn simply because that infant is deemed to be less than physically perfect. It is unfortunate that legislation is needed to do this, but apparently it is. I am for life—let us give all children a chance to live and grow.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in strong support of H.R. 1904.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 1904, the Child Abuse and Adoption Reform Act. Having introduced legislation last year on the issue of child pornography, I feel these amendments will significantly improve present law.

Congress has taken an active role in the prevention and elimination of the growing victimization of children. With passage of legislation such as the Child Protection Act of 1983, passed late last year, Congress has clearly brought the issue of child abuse to the forefront.

There are two aspects of the child abuse amendments which deserve our attention. First, this bill emphasizes preventative rather than curative support for the treatment of child abuse. The scope of the problem has unfortunately expanded to include domestic disputes and the abuse of the elderly. In short, family violence is at the center of the problem, and our current level of assistance is less than adequate. Too often, the police officer is the first and only outsider to come to the aid of these families. H.R. 1904 would provide for assistance to existing family violence prevention programs and spark innovative ways to meet the needs of family violence victims.

My second concern is for children who are victims of sexual abuse. We have a responsibility to end child pornography, child molestation, and all other sex-related crimes affecting children. As our Nation's greatest resource, our children must be protected. The passage of these amendments will help to secure a safe future for our children.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. OTTINGER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 1904) to extend and improve the provisions of the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment Act and the Child Abuse Prevention and Treatment and Adoption Reform Act of 1978, pursuant to House Resolution 350, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. ERLENBORN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah (Mr. MARRIOTT).

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment on which a separate vote has been demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment: Page 7, beginning on line 4, strike out "$25,000,000" and all that follows through "1987" and insert in lieu thereof "$35,000,000 for fiscal year 1984, $36,250,000 for fiscal year 1985, $37,563,000 for fiscal year 1986, and $38,941,000 for fiscal year 1987."

Page 7, beginning on line 22, strike out "$3,000,000" and all that follows through "1987", and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MARRIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded voted was refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 396, nays 4, not voting 33, as follows:

TRIBUTE TO GENE RAYMOND MILLER

(Mr. HUBBARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I speak today in tribute to, and memory of, a longtime friend of mine, Gene Raymond Miller, who died unexpectedly at the age of 89 on November 29, 1983, in Mayfield, Ky.

Gene Raymond Miller operated Miller Dairy Products in Mayfield for many years, and he was a successful businessman and extemely well liked by the people of Mayfield and Graves County, Ky. A veteran of World War II, Raymond Miller was actively involved in Mayfield in various ways, especially as a member of the First United Methodist Church and the Mayfield Rotary Club. In fact, he held a 40-year perfect attendance record as a Rotarian, devoting much of his time to his community development and progress.

He was a very concerned citizen—anxious about the future of his country, his State, and his community. Highway safety was a project to which he was devoted, even sending pens and pencils with the words inscribed: "Please drive carefully."

I was pleased to have had Raymond Miller as a constituent and proud to have been his State Senator in Kentucky and his Congressman in the U.S. House of Representatives.

Survivors include his lovely wife, Conolia Miller, of Mayfield; a son, Gene Ray Miller, senior vice president of Liberty Savings Bank in Mayfield, Ky.; a daughter, Mrs. Elaine Sarr, of Cincinnati, Ohio; a sister, Mrs. Alma Toler, of Metropolis, Ill.; and six grandchildren.

I extend my sympathy to the survivors and friends of this fine Kentuckian who was truly an inspiration to those of us who knew him.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I have asked to proceed for 1 minute for the purpose of inquiring of the distinguished majority whip the program for the balance of this day, this week, and next week, if possible.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the distinguished Republican leader yield to me?

Mr. MICHEL. I am happy to yield.

Mr. FOLEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, this concludes the business for today and for this week.

The House will meet at noon on Monday to consider the Consent Calendar and one bill under suspension of the rules. That bill, H.R. 3625, is the Inspector General Act Amendments of 1983. Any vote required on this bill will be postponed until Tuesday, February 7.

Also on February 6, Monday, the House will undertake general debate only on H.R. 555, the Construction Work in Progress Policy Act of 1983, under an open rule with 1 hour of debate. The rule has already been adopted. Again, this will be for general debate only.

On Tuesday, February 7, the House will meet at noon to consider the Private Calendar and three bills under suspension. These include:

H.R. 4656, regarding the Presidential certification on conditions in El Salvador; H.R. 4504, the rotation of chairmen to Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe; and Senate Concurrent Resolution 80, the sense of Congress regarding self-determination of Baltic States.

Recorded votes on that day and any recorded vote postponed from Monday will be taken on Tuesday at the conclusion of the debate on suspensions.

The House will meet at 3 p.m. on Wednesday, February 8, and at 11 a.m. on Thursday the 9th to complete consideration of H.R. 555, the construction work in progress bill, and, subject to a rule being granted, to take up H.R. 2899, the Environmental Research, Development, and Demonstration Act.

The announcement is made with the usual condition that the House may consider other legislation to be announced later. However, it is contemplated that at the conclusion of next week's business the House will adjourn for the Lincoln-Washington district work period and will reconvene at 12 o'clock noon on Tuesday, February 21, 1984.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman.

I have two questions. No. 1, H.R. 4656, regarding the Presidential certification on conditions in El Salvador, is that the precise language of the measure that was so-called pocket vetoed, or has there been a change? I do not have any member of the Foreign Affairs Committee on this.

Mr. FOLEY. It is my understanding that the bill is identical to legislation that was adopted by the House and Senate, by voice vote, I believe and that the President so-called pocket vetoed by not signing it during the time the House was in recess.

Mr. MICHEL. Of course, as a result of that, I am not sure whether or not we have ever had any little dialog on the floor of the House here relative to the position of the House leadership joining in with the other body in the suit that would for all practical purposes get us a more clear definitive ruling on pocket vetoes so-called that take place between sessions on an ongoing Congress; is that right?

Mr. FOLEY. Well, if the gentleman will yield further, it might be of interest to the Members to know that the bipartisan committee assisting the Speaker on questions of law and of the Clerk's counsel had a discussion of this matter last week. At that time they determined tentatively to join with the U.S. Senate in the suit contesting the constitutionality of the so-called pocket veto when the House has not adjourned at the end of a Congress and where the House and the Senate have appointed officers to receive any veto messages.

Without elaborating on the history of this issue, a case was decided by the U.S. Supreme Court in 1921 upholding the use of the so-called pocket veto during an intrasession recess. One of the principal elements of that decision was the assertion that the President was not able to return a veto to the House.

Since that time it has been customary for both the House and the Senate to appoint officers to receive veto messages and, indeed, I think this matter was the subject of an agreement with the Justice Department during the administration of President Ford regarding Senate-originated lawsuit.

So, regardless of the other issues involved in a so-called pocket veto during an intersession recess, it appears to the bipartisan leadership that this is an important constitutional question around which a certain ambiguity and vagueness still hang, and that it would be desirable for that matter to be resolved by the courts.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman for his explanation and would have to concur that it is the issue itself, rather than the vehicle. In other words, we are not prejudicing in any way our feelings with respect to that El Salvador resolution in this regard.

Mr. FOLEY. Absolutely not.

Mr. MICHEL. That is beside the point. It could have been anything else. It is just that we have some gray area here that really ought to be more clearly defined for us in the future, and for that reason there was bipartisan support in the leadership group to have that finally adjudicated in the courts.

Then the other question would be there is no mention made here of the so-called resolution having to do with the withdrawal of forces or whatever in Lebanon. What insight does the gentleman have on when we might be faced with that issue?

Mr. FOLEY. I would tell the gentleman that that bill has been introduced and has been referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I think the question is going to be considered by that committee.

However, whether the committee would be in a position to report that resolution in sufficient time for its consideration next week is not yet clear. I think that on that particular question the leadership on this side would have to reserve the possibility of listing that action later if time permits its consideration and if the Foreign Affairs and Rules Committee clear the bill for position on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman. I have been given to understand that it was on a very fast track.

My personal wish would be that we would not really be dealing with this subject until, since we are so pressed for time here, until after the Lincoln day recess. I know the administration, too, would very much like to have an opportunity to develop something with Members who will have to deal with this subject precisely on the Foreign Affairs Committee.

Mr. FOLEY. I would certainly go so far as to say to the gentleman that there is no plan to consider it by any extraordinarily expedited manner such as suspension of the rules or anything of that kind. If the bill is considered next week it will be considered under the normal procedures of the House, under a rule granted by the Committee on Rules and approved by the House.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman for that assurance, because an issue as important as that, to play games I think would just do the House a disservice. And then I suspect we just have our Members standing by, and with the gentleman having reserved on the point, that if it is ready for presentation to the House that could very well be one of the orders of business for next week.

Mr. FOLEY. I might say, too, that there is a possibility of some other minor additions to the scheduling next week. I do not think that these would be any major additions other than the possibility of the Lebanon resolution. At the same time, there is the possibility of another bill being added that we have attempted to consult with the Committee on Education and Labor about.

Mr. WALKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the minority leader has done an excellent job of getting some clarification on the matter with regard to the Lebanon resolution, that it will not come out under any extraordinary means.

I wonder also if we could get some idea as to whether we could get some advanced notice, like 48 hours of advanced notice, if it is going to come on to the floor so that some of the Members would have an opportunity to prepare for that, rather than simply have it rushed to the floor in a way that we are not informed.

Mr. MICHEL. As the gentleman knows, we do not do the scheduling on our side of the aisle. That question would be more appropriately put to the majority whip.

Mr. FOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOLEY. I will only say that since the bill will come to the floor only under a rule, and I do not anticipate a rule's being offered for action other than under the conditions of a 1-day layover, the gentleman would know at the time the Rules Committee considered what the possible schedule for floor action would be. Under the circumstances, I do not think there is any possibility of a sudden surprise scheduling of this legislation.

It is not intended to ask any extraordinary or special consideration of it other than the usual calendar consideration after a rule has been adopted.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, I guess my concern is that we have had some instances where we have had unanimous consent requests to waive that 1-day rule where the Rules Committee has met late in the evening and the rule filed here after special orders have begun. We have had some instances of that, and we have at times then had things rather rushed to the floor. If the gentleman from Washington is assuring us that that is not going to take place.

Mr. FOLEY. I cannot assure the gentleman that any of the normal procedures by which rules are adopted would not be taken, but I doubt very much that any special unanimous consent request is going to be offered. To put it in perspective, I think the gentleman's concern would give evidence that no such unanimous consent agreement would be arrived at. So I do not think it is really a matter of concern.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, I thank the gentleman and I do have that concern. I can assure the gentleman that that is one reason why I have asked the questions that I do. I think it provides maybe appropriate warning, and I thank the gentleman from Illinois for yielding.

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will continue to yield, we had no doubt about the gentleman's concern on that, and I think we took it into account.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I am happy to yield to my friend from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I rise after I heard this discussion and the question about 48-hour notice prior to bringing up something. I want to state that I am disappointed bitterly that there is no priority given to the fact that we have Americans under the shadow of death while we are dilly-dallying around here about telling the President that he is unnecessarily causing their deaths, their imminent death.

I would like to know who would be willing to give those Marines 48 minutes time to duck of advance notice?

Mr. FOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOLEY. I say in answer to the gentleman from Texas that I did not suggest that we were going to provide any special 48-hour notice on the consideration of this bill if it is brought up next week. What I told the gentleman from Pennsylvania and the gentleman from Illinois is that the bill will be brought up in the usual order, without attempting to proceed in an expeditious way.

Very frankly, I think the bill is controversial enough that there is no possibility, as a practical matter, that a unanimous-consent agreement could be obtained for the expedited consideration of the bill.

I think that is realistically the situation.

The other thing I would like to say is that there are many Members in the House who would like to vote on this matter as early as possible. I cannot and will not give any assurances that if the Committee on Foreign Affairs is able to report the bill, in time for its consideration next week, it would not be taken up; indeed, I think it will be taken up if that occurs. I simply gave the assurance that we are not going to attempt to report the bill under suspension of the rules or under unanimous consent. As a practical matter, that could not be obtained.

So the assurance, I think, is in line with the realistic assessment of the House situation. I know how strongly Members, on both sides of the aisle feel about the issues involved, and I think that the earliest practical time the matter can be considered, it should.

Yet, I would remind the gentleman from Texas that that is a concurrent resolution and requires the action of the U.S. Senate as well as the House. To my knowledge, there are no plans to take up the legislation next week in the other body.

The very fact that such a resolution has been introduced, I would assure the gentleman from Texas, signals that there is a concern on the part of a great number of Members of the House. It is also a signal, I think, that it is being understood, however controversial it may be in some quarters.

Mr. MICHEL. I do not think from what I understand of the situation that certainly we would expect any action on that resolution Monday or Tuesday and that the earliest could possibly be Wednesday. I may be wrong, but that is the way I see it developing.

Then, of course, as I said again, and I would want to emphasize and underscore, I would hope that it would be delayed until after the recess for a number of reasons that I think, if necessary, we can talk about.

But I would rather not at the moment.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GINGRICH. I thank the gentleman, the leader, for yielding.

I would inquire of the distinguished majority whip. There are a number of issues the country would like to see brought up. I know the very light schedule in the near future. I think, for example, of a constitutional amendment to permit prayer in schools, of an omnibus crime package, which the President sent up a long time ago, of the immigration bill, of the Bankruptcy Act, of a constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget or legislation concerning line-item veto. I wonder if the distinguished majority whip might tell us, since later in the year we will undoubtedly be told that there are too many things to do, the House is too busy, why is it not possible in the early part of the year to schedule some of these things and, in the case, for example, of voluntary prayer in school, an issue which is almost 25 years old and which has been studied long enough, and surely we could schedule a debate and have an up or down vote and allow the American people to see things.

I wondered if the distinguished majority whip might tell us why we are having such a light schedule when there are issues which the overwhelming majority of the American people would like to see this Congress act upon.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOLEY. I thank the minority leader for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, it is a mattter of proceeding through the normal and appropriate procedures and arrangements of the House. As I have just assured the gentleman, because of the controversy surrounding the resolution on Lebanon, we are not going to attempt to bring it up in a manner outside of the normal consideration of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and, the normal rules procedures. So I would have to tell him that several of those issues which he has mentioned have been pending before committees in the Congress. If they report those bills to the Committee on Rules, I have no doubt that they will be scheduled for action.

I might tell the gentleman that we have in fact voted on some of those issues more recently than 25 years ago. The House of Representatives in the late 1960's voted on a prayer in the public school amendment. We voted on a balanced budget amendment in the last Congress.

When the situations are appropriate for consideration, consideration will again be given to them. I have no predictions as to the constitutional amendments, which are within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the Judiciary; but I have every reason to believe that we will be considering the Immigration Act, I also think that there is a likelihood that the bankruptcy legislation will be considered. That is a Committee on the Judiciary bill as well.

I believe it will be considered this year, probably this spring, because of the pendency of the Supreme Court deadline.

As the gentleman knows, however, the business on the floor of the House is to some extent conditioned by the actions of the committees. When the committees have reported bills we schedule them, but when they are considering them we have to give the committees the opportunity to work their will. That is the traditional legislative pattern.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, will our leader yield one more time?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GINGRICH. I thank the gentleman for yielding again.

Let me say to the distinguished whip two things: First of all, some of those bills I have mentioned have been reported out of committee, including Immigration, which has been out for several months. Second, I am certain that the distinguished majority whip, a great scholar of this great institution, in the 200 year history of our institution sees a period going back to the 1960's as but a short time. But I was in college at the time. I think in fact, the majority of this House was either in high school or college at the time we voted on prayer in school. Some of us were in grammar school and grade school. We simply feel it would be useful for our generation to have a chance to vote also on this issue, and we would like some sort of indication, since the gentleman's side controls the committees, including the Rules Committee, and his side controls the Calendar, if we could have some promise from the gentleman or the Speaker or the distinguished majority leader that at some time before we adjourn for the election that we might have an up or down vote on, say, prayer in school. I think we would all on this side find it very useful.

Mr. FOLEY. If the distinguished minority leader would yield further, I thank the gentleman (Mr. GINGRICH) for his comments.

The gentleman from Georgia makes my years weigh heavy. It was George Bernard Shaw, who once said, I think that he was an old man before he stopped thinking of himself as a boy. Some of us, though years of seniority pile up, still feel as useful and energetic as the gentleman from Georgia is and appears to be. I know that this youthful energy and vitality are directed toward service to his State and country and that he desires to deal with these issues as soon as possible. Still, I would say to him that, as in the case we have just discussed with respect to the Lebanon issue, in my judgment, it would be unwise for us to disrupt the orderly and normal procedures of the House. There are provisions under the rules by which a majority of the House can command the committees to consider legislation.

Those procedures are ensconced in the rules, and the gentleman and his colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER) are well acquainted with the rules. Other than by those extraordinary means, we depend upon the committees of Congress that are assigned the responsibility of reviewing legislation, to consider and debate legislation before it is brought to the floor.

So I cannot give the gentleman, my friend (Mr. GINGRICH), the assurance that the committees will act with any particularity on the amendments or legislation that are pending before them. I did offer him my opinion that the Immigration Act would be considered this year, that the bankruptcy legislation, in my judgment, will be considered this year; but it is not the intention of the leadership on this side to usurp the authority of the committees of Congress.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 6, 1984

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUBBARD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

REQUEST TO DISPENSE WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LUNGREN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the distinguished majority whip might tell us, he has already mentioned the bankruptcy bill as one that he expects to be on the floor since the Supreme Court set another deadline, but I point out that it was passed out by our committee approximately a year ago, February of last year. But if the distinguished whip might be able to inform us as to whether or not we might expect in our normal order of things through the Rules Committee process and the scheduling procedures, whether we might expect to consider the insanity defense bill. The reason I bring this up is with the passage of time, next week and then out for some time after that, some period of time almost on the third anniversary of a tragic event that occurred here in Washington, that is the shooting of the President, at which time the American people were outraged by the insanity defense and there was a reconsideration of that nationwide.

A number of States have made some changes. We considered it in the House, and yet it still has not been scheduled for floor duty here.

Does the gentleman have any information as to when we might expect an issue as important as that to come here to the floor?

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNGREN. I yield to the gentleman under my reservation.

Mr. FOLEY. That bill has not been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LUNGREN. It has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FOLEY. It has been?

Mr. LUNGREN. It has been, last year.

Mr. FOLEY. Then I think the question is now whether the committee has asked or has been granted a rule. I am personally not aware, obviously, of the circumstance with respect to this particular piece of legislation, so I cannot give the gentleman any assurance.

Mr. LUNGREN. I appreciate the gentleman's remarks. I would just suggest on the one major committee I serve on we have issues such as immigration, bankruptcy, insanity defense, and others, which apparently are not important enough to reach the floor of the House under the normal procedure.

Therefore, I think we ought to protect our rights to Calendar Wednesday. And if the chairmen of the committees do not consider them important enough to bring up, so be it. But in that regard I would be constrained to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. FOLEY. I thank the Speaker.

MANUFACTURING OPPORTUNITIES IN SPACE

(Mr. AKAKA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to call to your attention the fact that space is already a place for new business opportunities. And, just in case any of my colleagues may think that the value of space-based manufacturing to the private sector is highly exaggerated, let me encourage them to read all about it in Business Week. The article I am talking about describes the production of trillions of microscopic spheres, each one made of latex and perfectly round. These peculiar spheres will be the first product manufactured in orbit and sold commercially. And, Mr. Speaker, I assure you that this is just the beginning. If we are smart enough to realize the full commercial potential that space offers us, and if we are smart enough to do what we can to create a climate which is conducive to private-sector investment in space, then we may very well see a thriving commercial space economy by the year 2000.

Mr. Speaker, I include the text of the article "Perfect Spheres: The First Product From Space," in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

[From the Businessweek, Jan. 30, 1984]

PERFECT SPHERES: THE FIRST PRODUCT FROM SPACE

Like the rocks U.S. astronauts brought back from the moon, the material in the beaker at Lehigh University seems pretty ordinary. But what looks like dust is actually a collection of trillions of microscopic latex spheres, each one perfectly round and precisely the same size. Even more than the moon rocks, these beads mark an important step in the exploitation of space: They will be the first product manufactured in orbit to be sold commercially.

Because of their uniformity, the tiny beads—each is 10 microns, or one four-thousandth of an inch, in diameter—can be used as standards to calibrate delicate scientific instruments and to make precise measurements of such diverse things as human cells, paint pigments, and the pores in filters and membranes. One ounce of the spheres—enough to fill 600 vials—is being turned over to the National Bureau of Standards, which plans to sell them at cost—$350 per vial.

The "microspheres" have been manufactured over the past year on four flights of the space shuttle in an experimental apparatus designed by researchers from Lehigh and built by General Electric Co. Shuttle crews tend four small cylindrical reactors that are mounted in the midsection of the space vehicle. Each is loaded with about 4 oz. of latex chemicals suspended in water. When the reactors are heated, the spheres begin growing slowly in the mixture. It takes about 20 hours for them to reach the 10-micron size.

A gap. When such spheres are formed on earth, gravity begins distorting them after they grow larger than three microns. They also tend to stick together and form clumps. Larger spheres can be made in space because they stay perfectly round until they solidify. "This is a gap [in measurement standards] that we could not fill without the space-produced material," says Stanley D. Rasberry, chief of the NBS' Office of Standard Reference Materials, which sells some 900 different measurement standards to industry for about $4 million a year.

The current supply of microspheres is owned by the National Aeronautics & Space Administration, which has spent about $700,000 on the project since it began funding the Lehigh researchers in 1978. NASA is turning the microspheres over to the NBS and will split the revenues from the sale with the standards agency to recoup some of its expenses. NASA had planned to end the project after the next shuttle flight, but the NBS prevailed on the space agency to extend it in order to make larger microspheres for measurement standards. Plans now call for making 30-micron spheres on the shuttle flight scheduled for Feb. 3 and 100-micron spheres on later flights.

The NBS estimates that the supply of 10-micron microspheres that have been made so far will last from three to six years. But John W. Vanderhoff, who is co-director of Lehigh's Emulsion Polymers Institute and heads the research project, is convinced that the market for spheres will be far larger. In fact, he and two co-experimenters are forming their own company to market microspheres in a range of sizes.

When the current research program ends, the space manufacturing startup will contract with NASA for use of space on the shuttle. The Lehigh scientists are already designing reactors to make microspheres that will be 20 times larger than the ones being used now. And the company plans to have its first latex spheres commercially available within three to five years. At that point, Vanderhoff foresees a market for the spheres of at least $1 million a year. "We think there is a commercial demand we can fill—at a profit," he says.

THE AGENDA OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE IS BEING ABANDONED BY CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HUBBARD). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, for some days now a number of us have been trying to carry to the floor of the House of Representatives the idea that this House should be speaking far more to the agenda of the American people than to the agenda of the greedy special interests that exist throughout this country.

We feel very strongly that what we have seen in the House over the last several years is more and more of greedy special interests coming here and having their legislative program acted upon and enacted, while the American people see their program abandoned by this Congress.

So we have attempted, over a period of last week and again this week, to do a couple of things. No. 1, to open up the processes of the House in such a way that more issues have an opportunity to be discussed, to open up the debate in this House so that more people have a chance to participate, and to try, through the amendment process, to bring some of the issues to the floor that we think the American people are concerned about, even if we have to bring those amendments to the floor under the agenda as announced and brought forward by the Democratic Party.

This was a week in which some of those kinds of things were done. And I thought this evening what I would do is review a little bit of what took place this week that both frustrated the agenda of the American people and, in some cases, advanced, to some small extent, the agenda of the American people.

Early in the week we took up a couple of bills. One of those bills was the Excellence in Education Act or the teacher excellence bill that we had before us. That bill came out, reported out of committee, in the form that the Democratic majority would like to have it passed by the Congress. It did not include any references to matters of intense concern to the American people like merit pay, to assure that only the best teachers are getting paid the top money, and school discipline, which assures that our schools are safe to teach in and to learn in.

Through the efforts of amendments from our side of the aisle we were able to attach to that bill amendments dealing with those topics, amendments dealing with competency for teachers, amendments dealing with merit pay, and amendments dealing with school discipline.

We think that those were small steps in the right direction, but they did assure that when the Democratic agenda was addressed out here some of things of importance to a majority of Americans also were heard.

The Library Services and Construction Act was brought to the floor. A couple of things were done in the course of the consideration of that bill, but I think the most important indication of how badly this House is out of touch with the American people was when a jobs amendment was brought to the floor, an attempt to deal specifically with special-interest legislation that has been put in place over a period of years by this Congress that prevents people from working.

Now, understand what I am saying. This Congress has, over a period of years, enacted special-interest bills that prevent people from getting jobs. And there was an amendment offered that would say that nothing in that bill could be used to allow that special-interest power to keep people from getting jobs in library construction.

That amendment was turned down here. Now that tells you something. It tells you that when it comes to the issue of whether or not jobs are more important—and I would refer people back to the debate—than certain greedy special interests, this House came down on the side of greedy special interests and against jobs.

I submit to you that the working people of this country feel jobs are one of the more important things in their lives and that they do not appreciate a majority in Congress who feels as though jobs are less important than making certain that the avarice of special interests is rewarded on the House floor.

We proceeded to Wednesday when we had a call of the Calendar of the House of Representatives. That is a period of time in which individual chairmen have the ability to bring to the floor those bills that have been reported out of their committee, bring them to the floor for 2 hours of debate and then an open rule in which they can be amended by all 435 Members of the House, if that is their wish.

That calendar, when it was called this week, was totally skipped over. Every chairman of the House of Representatives said that he had no bill important enough to bring to the House floor. No bill that has been reported through the regular processes of the Congress was important enough to bring to the floor on Wednesday of this week.

We just had a discussion here a few minutes ago, a discussion by the majority whip of the House, in which he said one of the things we want to do around here is stick to the regular processes, stick to the rules.

Well, some of us have a problem at times when those rules are basically used to oppress the minority. But in this case we are following the process precisely. And the process is that certain committees of this Congress have reported bills out of them. The committee has acted. The bills exist on what is called the Union Calendar. They exist ready for action on the House floor. They were allowed to be brought to this House floor under Calendar Wednesday and every chairman said he was not going to do it.

Now, some of those bills are pretty important to the American people. One of those bills was the tax reform bill. It was a bill where a rule was turned in the last Congress.

It is important to understand why the rule was turned down. The rule was turned down because they were bringing the tax-reform measure out here under a closed rule, which meant that we would not be able to offer certain key amendments.

□ 1730

Under Calendar Wednesday, that tax-reform bill could have been brought to the floor under an open procedure that would have allowed any and all amendments, it would have allowed a total reform of the Tax Code right here on the floor, with 435 Members of Congress offering things like maybe flat tax, maybe making the tax system more equitable, maybe getting rid of some of the big business perks like being able to buy Super Bowl tickets and charging them off on your taxes.

We could have some reforms of that kind right here on the floor this week. But guess what. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee decided that was not important enough to the American people to bring to the floor, even though the procedure was available.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I think the gentleman has made a very valuable point. But I just want to underscore that point, because the American people may think: "Well, Congress is so busy dealing with other items of such importance that it is understandable that they could not bring up the tax reform bill or any of the other items that are on the Union Calendar that the gentleman mentioned."

I just want to underscore that this last week in Congress, like the week before, was a very light week. We had very little substantive work that was conducted on the floor of the House. And is it not true that there is really no reason, in terms of the schedule of the Congress, why we could not have dealt with any of the issues that the gentleman has just mentioned?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is absolutely right. We worked ourselves into a real sweat on Wednesday. On Wednesday we had all of 2 hours of session. I mean we really worked hard. And an hour of that was partisan wrangling during the 1 minute speeches.

So I mean we were really at it. We were really maintaining a tough schedule around here on Wednesday that prevented the committee chairmen from coming forth with any kind of important bills. I mean they would not have wanted to interrupt all that important work that we were doing out here on Wednesday. Why, good heavens, we might not have gotten home in time for dinner if we had taken up one of these important bills. We might have had to stay here past 6:30 in the evening, having started the session at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, taking up a tax reform measure. That would be just too much to ask of those of us who have just come back from about 3 months at home.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. Just so that we can again put this in perspective, I want to make sure that we understand what the gentleman is saying here.

Several months ago, when we were holding town meetings in southwest Florida—immigration reform is a very, very important issue in southwest Florida—people kept asking, "Why are you not discussing it?"

And the first reaction that came back from this gentleman was that the rules did not permit us to discuss it; that, in essence, the Speaker decided it was not going to come to the floor during the first year of the session.

What the gentleman is saying to me now is that under Calendar Wednesday, in fact just this past Wednesday, the chairman of the committee could have brought that to the floor of the House; is that correct?

Mr. WALKER. I can understand why the gentleman would be shocked by that, but that is absolutely the case. It needed no rule, it needed no approval from the Speaker, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee could have come out here and called to the floor for action the immigration reform bill. It would have been fully subject to amendment. Some of us have concerns about certain provisions in that bill, but we could have offered amendments to address those concerns.

Mr. MACK. If the gentleman will yield further, some people could say, you know, "maybe they were not ready, I mean that there were some other things that would have to be done before it could be brought to the floor."

Has this been done before? I understand the Senate debated this issue for the last several years. Is that correct?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is absolutely correct. It has been in the Senate. It passed the Senate. The place it is being held up is here. It has been reported out of the committee now for weeks. So I would assume that everybody is pretty much ready as soon as it come to the floor.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. It is important to keep in mind, on the immigration bill, the bill has actually at one point come to the floor of the House and was debated, I cannot recall for exactly how long, but it was 5 or 6 or 7 hours of intensive debate on the floor of the House before the gentleman from Florida was elected to the Congress. However, we were precluded from voting on it.

So, in the case of the immigration bill, not only has it been considered in the Senate, not only has it been subjected to intensive hearings and debate in committee, but it actually has come to the floor to be debated by the full membership, which is unusual in this institution. It is the voting that they do not want to let us do on it. They will not permit us to pass this piece of legislation.

Mr. MACK. If the gentleman will yield further, having been here only for 1 year, there is obviously a lot to learn. Can the gentleman give me some explanation as to why we did not have that brought up on Wednesday? Is there something that I could do to see that it does come up to the floor?

Mr. WALKER. Well, I would love to be able to give an answer to the gentleman on that, but that is up to the individual committee chairmen. I would suggest that probably we are going to have to make direct appeals to the committee chairman, and I would suggest that probably the American people may have to begin making direct appeals to that committee chairman, because it is wholly in his hands.

I would love to think that under Calendar Wednesday individual Members of Congress might have the power to call up bills that have been reported from committee, but we do not have that. That is not in the rules. The rules give that strictly to the chairman of the committee. It is the chairman of the committee that is responsible if those bills do not come up on the floor.

I would think that an awful lot of the American people, particularly some of those groups out across the country that have been watching some of this legislation and wondering why it does not come up, would begin to ask those chairmen, "Why in the world when the calendar was called, and nobody responded, didn't you come out with our bill and say, 'I want to take this up?' Why did you let that opportunity go by? Why is that something that was not done?"

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will yield further, I just have to make the point, as we have made in the past, with no lack of respect intended for our committee chairmen, it is not mere coincidence that every committee chairman declined to call up a single piece of legislation.

When you have that kind of procedure where every single committee chairman refuses to bring up a single piece of legislation under the Calendar Wednesday procedure, it obviously is a party decision, it is obvious that the Democratic majority decided that it is party policy not to bring up any of the legislation we have discussing here today. I think that is worth keeping in mind.

Mr. WALKER. And let us understand why that could happen. Why that happens is because it comes out here under a procedure where it would be fully debated and fully amendable. They would not have the power of the Rules Committee to limit what amendments might be put on these bills, they would not have the power to limit the amount of debate time, they would not have any of these powers. It would come out here in a way that all of the Members of the House would have an opportunity to work their will on a piece of legislation. That is something that this increasingly dictatorial body is not about to permit. That just does not happen around here because we want to keep the whole thing contained. And that is precisely why every committee chairman was, I suppose, ordered not to participate in Calendar Wednesday this week.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will yield further, I want to make a point. As the gentleman puts it, we are not exactly working ourselves into a sweat around here. What really strikes me is that we were home for almost 2 months on what we call the district work period, which is partially a vacation but also partially for Members of Congress to have an opportunity to go back and work in their districts, listening to their constituents. All of us came back here, having spent a good deal of time throughout the entire month of December and the entire month of January listening to our constituents to hear what is on their minds. Primarily I heard in my district concern about the deficit. The gentleman from Florida indicated earlier that one of the main issues that he heard about was the question of immigration. Other issues we have heard about is bankruptcy reform legislation and school prayer. So we came back at the end of January, having spent better than 2 months in our districts, listening to our constituents, finding out what is on their minds.

Now, the first 2 weeks we have been back in session, have we dealt with a single one of these concerns that we have heard from our constituents back in our districts? No. In fact, we have specifically refused to deal with the issue of the deficit. We have voted down the application of the line-item veto to a specific piece of legislation. We voted more money for weatherization. That may be a good project or it may be a bad project, but it certainly does not deal with the deficit to add money to that program.

We have refused on every day, every day that this House has been in session, to bring to the floor under unanimous-consent request either the balanced budget constitutional amendment or the line-item veto amendment. And, of course, we have made no progress on the other issues we have discussed—school prayer, immigration, the other issues of major concern.

Now, keep in mind that these are the issues we were told over the months of December and January by our constituents that we should be acting on. We have not acted on them yet. I suspect that next week the same procedure will be followed. We will act on none of these issues again next week.

And then what happens? Then we go home for another district work period, where we will be told that we should again find out what is on our constituents' minds so that we can run back to Washington to act on them just as quickly as we did before.

Well, I will tell you, my constituents are not going to give me a substantially different message, I will bet you, when I go home in 2 weeks than they did when I was home in December and January. They are going to say to me, "Why have you still not done anything about the deficit?"

I suspect that the gentleman from Florida is going to hear from his constituents, "Why have you still not done anything about immigration reform, school prayer, bankruptcy reform, all of the other issues?"

And then we will come back and go into session again, and the process just repeats itself. It is really discouraging. It is worth stating that it is as discouraging for many of us here in the Congress as it must be for our constituents.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for his statement. The gentleman is correct. What is happening out there is that the American people are becoming more and more disgusted with Congress. More and more polls show that Congress is at a low ebb in terms of popular opinion and popular support. And that is almost understandable, given the way we perform around here.

The fact is that some of the Members here are going to go back to their districts and they are going to explain, "Well, it is true, we did not do anything on the floor, you will not find very much, but, boy, were we working in committee. I mean I was in my committee and I was in there just plugging away, and we were doing all kinds of great things in committee, and I assure you we may not have been working up much sweat on the floor, but we sure were in committee."

Well, I would remind the American people that in those committees, those committees are stacked against their agenda. If they are working hard in the committees, they are working hard in a situation where, No. 1, the American people are not represented proportionately as to how they voted to send Members to this House of Representatives. The committees are working, using a ghost voting procedure to assure that some members who are not there are still voted.

So if in fact those committees are working, that is unfairness and inequitability at work against the agenda of the American people. I think what they ought to be concerned about is the fact that none of that activity is making it out here to the floor where they can hold their members accountable.

We do not allow ghost voting on the floor, so members are accountable out here. They are far less accountable in committee, and the American people should be demanding that those votes be cast here on the floor, not by ghosts in committee.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, a moment ago the gentleman may have come up with one of the reasons why items have not been brought to the floor under Calendar Wednesday.

It was mentioned that we had some 5 to 10 hours of debate on the immigration reform bill a little over a year ago, I guess.

Mr. WEBER. I believe it was in the lameduck session of the 97th Congress.

Mr. WALKER. I believe the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MACK. Then the gentleman said that if it did come to the floor that in essence it was an open rule and that basically any kind of amendment could be brought forward and that could be debated for quite a length of time.

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MACK. I guess the point that I am raising with the gentleman is: Is it because there are so many other things that we have to do here that we could not allot enough time? Of course, one would have to say that if that were the case, why are we not in session tomorrow?

Mr. WALKER. Well, the gentleman knows that on Calendar Wednesday, when we could have brought this up, we did have a piece of legislation before us that demanded our immediate attention, and that was the Earthquake Reduction and Fire Prevention Act which, as we all know, was a very controversial piece of legislation, something that the Members of this House were going to debate for hours. We knew that when it came out here.

The fact is, I think the bill passed on a voice vote. I have kind of forgotten now.

Mr. WEBER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WALKER. It was a totally acceptable piece of legislation to everyone. If Congress can prevent earthquakes, I think we ought to do all in our power to do that, and if we can do something about fire prevention, who is against that?

As a matter of fact, those of us on our side of the aisle put on an amendment which praised volunteer fire companies as a part of that effort, and I am kind of proud of the fact that we said that the public health and safety can be protected by people in their local communities without Federal interference through organizations like volunteer fire companies. I think we markedly improved the bill by doing that.

But the fact is, that was not a piece of legislation that was preventing us from getting to Calendar Wednesday. It was a piece of legislation that we could have basically wrapped up in a matter of a few minutes and, in fact, did within a matter of an hour. We could very well have taken care of that legislation along with anything that would have been put on the calendar as a result of the application of Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MACK. What the gentleman is saying, then, is that really there is sufficient time to debate fully the issues that are of concern to the American people; that we cannot use the excuse that there are still things that have to be done in committee or there are still things that have to be worked out before it gets to the floor, or there are other things that demand our attention to where we cannot spend the time on those important issues. Those things just do not hold up, then, is what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. WALKER. I am sure those arguments are going to be used out across the country. What we have been doing on the House floor has been billed by some as obstructionist tactics. My question on that is: Obstructing what? We have not been doing anything. It is a real question as to what in the world we would be obstructing out here.

The fact is, we do not have anything on the schedule. We did not have much on the schedule this week. We do not have anything that amounts to much of anything next week, unless they add the Lebanon resolution. That would be a very important resolution, but that is not reflected on what they have actually scheduled for next week. That may get added later on.

So we have plenty of time to debate these things. Let me tell my colleagues, what we are going to hear later on in this session when we try to bring these important matters to the floor is precisely what the gentleman from Georgia referred to a little bit ago in his colloquy with the majority whip. We are going to be told along about May and June and July and August that there is no way we can get to that agenda; we are far too busy. At that time we will have a list of legislation. We will have suspension bills, 20 bills on the calendar for every Tuesday to the point that the Members will not be able to know in detail what is in any of the bills.

We will be running legislation through here all the time, and we will probably not have time to schedule some of these important matters, and that will be the excuse then as to why we cannot get to this important agenda for the American people. They will hope that we have forgotten these dog days of January, February, and March when the Congress could have been acting, but refused to yield.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, that is a very important point, because the American people need to understand that the rules are being used explicitly to block action on their agenda. I would venture to guess that when we get to the point that the calendar is rather crowded, as the gentleman suggests, later on in the year, and that that is then an excuse for not debating these items that are of concern to the American people, we will also find another interesting phenomenon.

We will find then that the rules are used under some extraordinary circumstances to bring things to the floor that the majority wants to be voted upon. In the colloquy between the gentleman from Georgia and the distinguished majority whip earlier today, the majority whip pointed out that one of the reasons we could not bring items such as school prayer to this House of Representatives for a vote is because we must respect the integrity of the process, we must respect the committee system, we must allow the rules to function in a normal manner.

I would just point out that toward the end of the session last year, on at least two occasions extraordinary rules were used to bring items to the floor that the administration in some cases, but most often the Democratic majority wanted to bring to the floor of this House, and I am sure the gentleman in the well as well as the gentleman from Florida remember them very well.

We were asked, for instance, on one of the last days of the session to come to the House floor and vote on a rule on a continuing appropriations bill that appropriated money for the International Monetary Fund and for certain housing assistance. In voting for the rule, we were, in essence, voting for the appropriation. That is because this entire matter was considered under an extraordinary rule reported by the Committee on Rules; a real bending of rules, not a breaking of the rules, but the use of the rules in an extraordinary manner to bring something to the floor that the majority wanted to be voted on, in this case the IMF bailout.

Also toward the end of the last session, most of the American people are aware that this Congress voted on ERA.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, if I could reclaim my time for just a moment, let us focus on that for the American people.

In other words, the big banks, when they came in here, when the greedy special interests came in here with some matter that was important to them that the American people had some question about because it was $8½ billion of their money, but when the greedy special interests came in here and wanted an extraordinary procedure used, we found a way to do it at that point.

But when we suggest that maybe some procedure should be used to get things to the floor that have 80 percent support among the American people but do not have any greedy special-interest support, then we cannot get to those; we have to be very, very careful that we follow every little minute detail precisely and we surely cannot use the same procedure that was used to spend $8½ billion of taxpayer money for the big banks.

Mr. WEBER. If the gentleman will yield further, he is precisely correct. The point again, of course, is that we can bring anything to the floor we want by using the rules in some manner so that we can act on the American people's agenda, but just as the gentleman points out, some legislation has the support of greedy special-interest groups and they manage to convince the majority to utilize the rules to bring their interests to the floor; whereas, schoolchildren who want to pray are not necessarily that well organized so we have to abide by the rules very carefully, which in this case means that their interests are never represented on the floor of the House.

A second example that the American people were all aware of is that this House of Representatives voted on the equal rights amendment toward the end of the last session. That was also brought to the House floor for a vote under an extraordinary procedure, put on what we call the Suspension Calendar, which means that any item brought up on the Suspension Calendar is limited to only 40 minutes of debate and is not subject to amendment, normally reserved for only noncontroversial items, but in this case the Democratic majority felt it was sufficiently important that we vote on the ERA so it was brought up under this extraordinary procedure.

The only point I am making is that extraordinary procedures which are within the rules are used all the time to bring up items that are of importance to the Democratic majority, but when they do not want to bring items up such as the balanced budget constitutional amendment, the line-item veto constitutional amendment, voluntary school prayer, bankruptcy reform, immigration reform, the President's crime package, or any of the other items that are opposed by the Democratic majority, then they do not say to the American people, "We are opposed to those things." Then they say, "Oh, well, we must abide by the rules, and for various reasons the rules will not allow us to bring this legislation to the floor for a vote."

The American people do not understand why their agenda is not being acted upon. Their representatives do not have to be accountable for their action or inaction, and that is causing a cynicism and lack of confidence in this institution that the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred to earlier.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, let us go a step further. I know we have them talking about it, but I think we ought to go a step further and think that, even without being concerned about the rules, after having gone through all those questions, again coming back to Calendar Wednesday, there are pieces of legislation that could have been brought out here this Wednesday. It was not a problem of following every minute detail; it was just a simple fact that they were not going to bring it out.

Mr. WALKER. Yes, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Florida is exactly right.

I would suspect—it is just a guess because I do not know of any polling data on it, but I am just suspecting that the vast majority of the American people think that we ought to reform the insanity defense plea in our criminal courts and not permit people to get off the hook when they commit murder and other kinds of foul deeds by pleading insanity, that we ought to at least make certain that that insanity plea implies guilt.

We have a bill around here, a tough new bill on insanity defense, that has come out of committee and that could have come to the floor. That is something that the vast majority of Americans would agree on.

The American people are upset about crime. They are upset about the fact that they do not feel safe in their homes, they do not feel safe on the streets, and they do not feel safe in the parking lot and shopping centers. They are upset about that. And here was one way of toughening up on the law that could have been brought to the floor under Calendar Wednesday.

Was it brought out? No, we passed it over. We did not consider a measure like that that I would be willing to guess has overwhelming public support in every community of this Nation.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Lest the American people think that the Calendar Wednesday procedure is an extraordinary procedure that has never been used in the past, I would just like to recount a conversation that the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGRICH) and I had with a member of the majority a few days ago. Actually, in this case, this is a member of the majority who is a committee chairman and a liberal Democrat. And he just explained to us that when he first came to Congress, the Calendar Wednesday procedure was used extensively to bring legislation to the floor supported by liberals, in this case civil rights legislation that could not be brought to the floor through any other procedure.

The Calendar Wednesday procedure is a tool that has been utilized effectively in the past when the agenda of the American people has been blocked by various interests in the Congress of the United States. What the gentleman from Pennsylvania is suggesting, what I am suggesting, and what the gentleman from Florida and others are suggesting is that now we ought to use the Calendar Wednesday procedure again to bring to the floor another agenda that again is being ignored by this body.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is correct. In the late forties and early fifties, the people in this country were way ahead of the Congress on the issue of civil rights. The American people understood inherently and innately that it was only fair to allow people to have full civil rights in this country, and yet when those bills came to the floor or came to the Congress, they were held up. They were held in committee in much the same way as the bills that we are talking about are being held today. So this procedure was used to bring some of those civil rights measures to the floor for action because the American people knew that that was right.

I am suggesting that the American people know that some of the things that we are saying now are right. They are in that civil rights tradition. We are talking of human rights issues, we are talking of basic policy decisions that need to be made on behalf of a people's agenda in this body that are being blocked, and we are disappointed because the majority side that has the power to bring some of these things to the floor refuses to do so, even though they are provided with the mechanism by which to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I have one more item, and then I want to close. But I do think it is important also to reflect on the fact that today we had another bill on the floor that dealt with child adoption and child abuse and some of the family violence problems that plague this Nation. Again the majority brought out a bill which reflected their version of how these programs should be treated.

I think it is important to note that in the course of consideration of that bill a couple of items that I think are on the agenda of the American people also got in. I think the American people are disturbed about the pervasive problem that has affected many of our major cities of child prostitution, of children that are literally being kidnapped, runaways that are being held hostage by organized crime and other interests and are being forced into prostitution on the streets of our cities.

We brought to the floor language that was adopted by this body to try to deal in some small way with that problem. I think that is in line with the American people's agenda.

I think that what we attempted to do to protect the lives of disabled infants was also in line with the agenda that the American people want addressed on this floor.

So I would say that this has been a week of a few successes, but mostly failure—failure, not because we did not try, but failure because the system has been designed in such a way as to assure that the agenda of the American people does not get properly addressed. Maybe next week we will be more successful. I would hope so because I think the American people are watching and waiting for us to act responsively and responsibly.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman would just go a step further. I know he has recounted some of the events of this past week, but it might be helpful if the gentleman could go back and pull together what has happened in the last several weeks, covering the discussions we have had about committee ratios, the discussions we have had about the staff assignments, what the ratio is there, and the discussion about—the gentleman used the term, "ghost voting," that some people refer to as proxy voting. I think possibly if the gentleman said pull those together, it might be helpful.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I think what we have developed here is a pattern. We have shown a pattern of abuse of power in this House. It is a pattern of abuse of power which begins with committees, and they are not one-man, one-vote but, rather, are stacked in favor of a majority that does not wish to address the real issues. It goes to a pattern of abuse which includes "ghost voting" in those committees.

It goes to a pattern of abuse which permits, as the Reader's Digest has described the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD process in this House, a license to lie on the part of Members of this Congress.

Mr. MACK. What do you mean by "a license to lie"?

Mr. WALKER. Well, what happens on the floor is that under the procedures of the House, when I am through speaking here, I have the power to be able to take the remarks that I have made here and do what we call revise and extend them, and if I wanted to turn those around 180 degrees and say that I said something different than what I really said, that is within my power to do so.

Mr. MACK. Is that the official record of this body that the gentleman is speaking of?

Mr. WALKER. This is the official document that is used for legislative history. It is the official record of this Congress that I am talking about having the power to do it, and it is done out here all too often. As I say, it has been documented, and it has been called by the Reader's Digest and some others "a license to lie." And I do not think that that is what the American people see as being in their best interests.

We have seen an abuse of power where legitimate special order requests were made and they were objected to because they did not want to see time lined up in such a way that a different agenda than what this House is pursuing could be debated each and every night.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WALKER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, I believe one of the reasons we were asking for those special orders was because all during the day during which this floor is controlled by the Democratic majority we are not able to talk about the issues that concern us and concern the American people, and all we were asking for is the opportunity to be able to express those concerns and those ideas; is that not correct?

Mr. WALKER. The gentleman is absolutely right, and there was nothing extraordinary about it. We spend several hours a day talking about the Democrats' agenda. We just felt it might be well to spend a couple of hours every day talking about our agenda.

As it is, we are taking the special orders day by day, but it does keep us from lining up, for instance, some special orders where we could bring in people and really address a lot of these issues in a far more meaningful way; but of course, the Democrats wanted to block it. The Democrats knew that was what we might do, so they wanted to block that. You know, to me it is an abuse of power. It is an attempt to rein in the minority. It is the type of thing that would be unacceptable in a parliamentary body that was truly democratic in nature.

We also attempted through unanimous-consent requests to bring some things to the floor that are important to the American people, like a balanced budget, school prayer, the line-item veto. When we were doing that by unanimous-consent requests, a few Democrats found themselves on the wrong side of that issue. They objected and found themselves in trouble back in their districts for doing so.

So what did we have? We had a ruling from the Chair that we could no longer do that, that that was no longer going to be permitted because we do not want anybody on the other side to have their constituents really know what it is they are doing up here in Washington. It seems to me that was power used to curtail the rights of the minority.

We have had a whole pattern of that being built. I think what it tells the American people is that there is something drastically wrong in the way the people's body is run and it needs to be changed.

Mr. MACK. Well, I want to thank the gentleman for taking this time to recap what we have seen happen during the past several weeks.

I kind of have a feeling that possibly toward the latter part of this session, if in fact we have been unable to get those issues which concern the American people, we are unable to get those to the floor of the House and we are told now it is because we are too busy, that we have other things to take care of, I am sure the gentleman and others will continue to remind the leaders just exactly what is going on in this House, the Democratic leadership.

Mr. WALKER. I can assure the gentleman that I am looking very carefully at how we make certain that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD reflects the fact that we did not do very much here early on and we will remind them of it.

RETURN OF THE McGOVERN-MONDALE WING OF THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. GINGRICH) is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk today about Lebanon and the return of the McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic party. Indeed, the title of my special order for today is "The Return of the McGovern-Mondale Wing of the Democratic Party."

There has been a great deal of talk in the last 2 days about Lebanon and about the House Democratic Caucus unusual action in drafting a purely political resolution on Lebanon in the Democratic Causus. It was then sent to the Foreign Affairs Committee with instructions that the Foreign Affairs Committee will report out Democratic Party policy, probably the clearest break with a bipratisan foreign policy that we have had in recent years. I think that the last page of the Wall Street Journal for today, page 62, really outlines and I want to share with the House this page because from the bottom up it says, "House Speaker O'NEILL endorses Mondale."

Then it says, "Split over pulling Marines out of Lebanon widens as Democrats push for resolution."

At the top it says, "Doves Return to Harvard for a Day."

That story begins:

At times, Tuesday night at Harvard it seemed that someone had set the clock back 12 years. Seven Democratic Presidential candidates were denouncing an allegedly war-mongering Republican President before a liberal college audience, competing as to who could sound the most dovish. George McGovern, who led the Democratic anti-war crusade in 1972, said that perhaps his earlier losing campaign had been ten years ahead of its time. Indeed, it was Mr. McGovern who delivered the most articulate critique of the Reagan administration's policies and who seemed to get the most applause from the audience.

Now, I think it is significant that every major Democratic candidate for the Presidency would go to Harvard with George McGovern to recreate the policies of the past, because I think it teaches us something. The McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic Party has returned in full force in foreign policy. The weakness of the Carter administration in foreign policy was not a reflection of the Carter personality. It was a reflection of the deep commitment of the McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic Party to a policy of weakness, isolation and withdrawal from the world, a policy that goes all the way back to George McGovern's 1972 campaign for the Presidency.

They said in this particular meeting on foreign policy:

The debate offered a rough outline of what seems to be a Democratic consensus on the foreign policy issues where Mr. Reagan is vulnerable politically. These include Lebanon and all the candidates support an early withdrawal of U.S. Marines from Beirut. Some, like Senator Hart, want to make "bringing the troops home" a central campaign issue.

Central America: The candidates seemed to agree that growing U.S. military assistance to El Salvador is a mistake because it focuses on Communist subversion and that poverty and injustice should be addressed.

U.S.-Soviet relations: The candidates generally support a nuclear arms freeze and a more conciliatory approach to Moscow.

Then they go on to say what I think is the most damning and the most clear statement in this article:

It was open season on rightwing, anti-Communist governments Tuesday night from Mr. McGovern's attack on the—this is a quote from Mr. McGovern—"the corrupt, murderous gang in El Salvador" to Mr. Mondale's disdain for the Christian "minority faction" that is ruling Lebanon. The message was clear: Anti-Communism alone won't be enough to assure support from a Democratic President.

Note that there is no liberal Democratic opposition to Soviet tyranny, to the Syrian dictatorship, to the Iranian tyranny, to the Nicaraguan, or Cuban Communist dictatorships.

One can summarize the McGovern-Mondale liberalism on foreign policy. Indeed, the lack of courage of the McGovern-Mondale wing is unbelievable.

I quote again:

To be sure, there were some hard-hitting statements. Former Vice President Walter Mondale said that he supported World War II. Jessie Jackson said he accepted Israel's right to exist. Senator Alan Cranston said he opposed "the cold war mentality," and Senator Gary Hart said he believed in the idealism of John F. Kennedy.

Let me say that it is courageous of Walter Mondale to embrace World War II 45 years later, now that we know the Nazis really were bad, unlike the Stalinist rhetoric of the thirties and now that we know that the West won and now that it is over.

I am not sure who gave Jessie Jackson the right to accept Israel's right to exist. It seems to me the Israelis have tried to get that right in part because of the Jewish experience in World War II.

Furthermore, while Senator Cranston may oppose the cold war mentality, I am not sure that does much to stop the Soviets from creating a cold war, and for Senator HART to say that he believes in the idealism of John F. Kennedy, who said, "We will go anywhere, pay any price, bear any burden to sustain freedom." This seems ironic, since Senator HART was George McGovern's campaign manager in 1972 and belongs to a McGovern-Mondale wing that will go nowhere, pay nothing, and do little to sustain freedom.

The Wall Street Journal noted the absence of any positive ideas:

The Democrats at this point in the campaign seem to be defining themselves on foreign policy largely in terms of their opposition to President Reagan's policies. The candidates agreed the U.S. Marines should be pulled out of Lebanon, but they did not advance any coherent new policies for dealing with the turmoil of the Middle East. They urged arms control agreements with the Soviet Union without offering a framework for dealing with Moscow.

Let me say that if Ronald Reagan was the greatest threat to peace and freedom on the planet, I am confident the McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic Party could deal with it; however, dealing with Assad, who is a dictator in Syria, dealing with Khomeini, who is a dictator in Iran, dealing with Qadhafi, who is a dictator in Libya, dealing with Andropov who is a dictator in the Soviet Union, or Castro who is a dictator in Cuba, I think those are very different issues, indeed. In fact, it is precisely because the McGovern-Mondale Democrats feel so comfortable fighting Ronald Reagan that their discomfort dealing with the others is so obvious.

Indeed, in one interview last year, one leading Democratic member of the McGovern-Mondale wing in a half page interview in the Washington Post could not bring himself to admit that Fidel Castro was a dictator.

As bad—and I quote Mr. McGovern—"as bad as the corrupt murderous gang in El Salvador is."

As bad as—and I quote Mr. Mondale, "Minority faction" Christian leadership in Lebanon is, those are easy for the McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic Party. They are weak. They are pro-American. They are precisely the kind of people the McGovern-Mondale wing has been kicking around for the last 10 years.

What we have today from the Democrats is a petty, bickering anti-Reagan kind of foreign policy.

Mondale claimed experience at Harvard with Carter. He pointed out he had served on the National Security Council, and what an experience that was: The Russian invasion of Afghanistan, the Iranian seizure of American hostages, the capture of Nicaragua by Communists.

Indeed, Mr. Mondale was attacked by Senator HART who felt that the Carter administration's human rights policies were too easy, and I quote, "too easy on America's friends. The United States should have been tougher on conservative rulers like the Shah of Iran and President Ferdinand E. Marcos of the Philippines," Senator HART said. In other words, not a single Democrat talked about being tough on America's enemies, about taking them in Latin America. We talk about elections in El Salvador, not Nicaragua.

In the Middle East the McGovern-Mondale Democrats demand elections in Lebanon but not in Syria. The Lebanon Democrats and the McGovern-Mondale tradition say that if you are pro-Soviet, a Communist, a dictatorship, or anti-American, the liberal Democrats will turn a blind eye on you. But if you are pro-American, struggling to be free, and trying to hold elections, the liberal Democrats will hold you up to very high standards and nothing you do will ever be good enough.

Take El Salvador, for instance. We have had elections in El Salvador and no elections in Nicaragua. And what do the McGovern-Mondale Democrats demand? More elections in El Salvador.

Let us take the situation in Lebanon. We have a government struggling to establish a coalition in Lebanon. It also happens to be pro-American. It is not good enough.

Next take Assad in Syria who just last year killed thousands of people bombing one of the Syrian cities to suppress a rebellion, and what is the McGovern position on having elections in Syria? That is not an issue. In other words, you had better be careful if you are pro-American because you probably will not be good enough. You will be slandered by Mr. McGovern, disdained by Mr. Mondale. Was that not precisely what led to the collapse of the Shah and the rise of the Iranian hostage crisis?

There is a consistent pattern to the McGovern-Mondale Democrat foreign policy of weakness when faced with violence and blindness and when faced with communism.

Many Democrats in this House have been a part and parcel of that McGovern-Mondale liberalism. In 1975 there was a vote in the House of Representatives which sent the signal to the North Vietnamese and they have said so in print, and they have admitted it. They watched this House of Representatives and when we cut off aid in this House because of the McGovern-Mondale wing of Democratic Party seizing control in the election, then the North Vietnamese knew they could invade the south.

And it was this House and the McGovern-Mondale Democrats which adopted the Clark amendment which crippled America in Africa, and put 25,000 Cubans in Angola, which led to the Soviet Union deal with the Cubans that they would provide troops in Africa in return for the Soviet approval of their Cuban adventurism in South America. That then led to the Soviet presence in Africa and advances in Ethiopia and Mozambique. The Soviets then felt emboldened enough to invade Afghanistan.

In 1979, Nicaragua went Communist with the strong support of the Cubans and the Soviets.

In 1979 the Iranians felt America was so weak they could seize hostages.

And in 1980 the Soviets despised us so much they crushed Walesa and the free labor unions in Poland.

The rest of us remember the humiliation of the McGovern-Mondale policies under Carter where we remember America as helpless in Iran, and we remember America as helpful in Afghaninstan, and we remember America helpless in Nicaragua. We remember America helpless in Angola. But the Americans got tired of it and we voted for a change.

As President Reagan said just last week in this House, America is back. We elected Ronald Reagan and the day he was sworn in the American hostages in Iran were released.

Ronald Reagan stood up to communism in Central America, and despite the best efforts of the McGovern-Mondale wing in this House to cripple him, we still have not lost the fight for freedom in Central America.

Ronald Reagan saved 800 American students in Grenada and returned freedom to a little island in our backyard. Despite the movement to impeach him by some members of the McGovern-Mondale group of the Democratic Party, overwhelmingly both the people of Grenada and the people of America are glad we had strength in that area.

Ronald Reagan saved Beirut from a continuation of the brutal, horrible bombings in the summer of 1983. Frankly, I was very skeptical of our going in there and remain very skeptical of our being there. But at the time, with Israeli forces on the outskirts, with the PLO, with the Palestinian Liberation Organization in the city, and with hundreds of thousands of civilians at stake, the humanitarian thing was to take the risk, and this President had the courage to take that risk.

Go back to that crisis. Remember the pictures night after night of civilians, of children being bombed, and threats by the Israelis to cut off the water supply of the city, and the promise by the Palestinians to fight block by block, causing thousands of civilian casualties.

The fact is it was a courageous thing to do. It was done and now we are stuck with the consequences, and we have to work carefully and slowly to figure out what to do and not rush hastily in 1 week with a partisan political package.

An example that our strength works is the fact Ronald Reagan worked hard with the Japanese to rebuild our strength in the Far East, and just recently the North Koreans for the first time have offered to hold peace talks which the South Koreans were invited to.

What are Ronald Reagan's goals in the world? A free, peaceful El Salvador; a free and peaceful Lebanon; a free, peaceful Western Europe; and a free, peaceful Japan and South Korea.

And what are the McGovern-Mondale Democratic goals in the world? We know they are to beat Reagan, but what else? As the Wall Street Journal said:

> The Democrats at this point in the campaign seem to be defining themselves on foreign policy largely in terms of their opposition to President Reagan's policies.

It is in this McGovern-Mondale setting of weakness to our silent enemies, blindness to our Communist enemies, and an arrogant, moral, self-righteousness to cover up a policy of withdrawal and isolationism that as a history teacher I have to refer back to Chamberlain in the 1930's. There is not any difference between Mondale's disdaining for the Christian minority faction, as he calls it, in Lebanon, and Chamberlain's willingness to sell out the free Czechs in Czechoslovakia.

There is no difference between McGovern's attack and slander on the Government of El Salvador and the willingness of those Britains who were afraid in the 1930's to say anything, do anything about Austria, about Czechoslovakia, about Poland, to give Hitler whatever he wanted to eat, to ignore the Soviet Union when it took Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, and turned a blind eye to the war in Finland.

Peace at any price, as Churchill warned over and over again, becomes the most certain avenue to war.

I would challenge the McGovern-Mondale Democrats. Is there any place in the world they would protect, they would stand firm? Where would it be?

They stood up here last year and were against putting missiles in Europe. They assured us that the Germans, who had just voted to accept those missiles, did not want them.

They stood here day after day and fought against any effort to reinforce NATO.

They are against us in El Salvador. They are against us in the Middle East.

Where, then, would they in fact draw a line? El Salvador, after all, is closer to Texas then Texas is to Washington. If El Salvador is not close enough, where would be? Mexico? Houston? Possibly Phoenix, Bethesda?

At what point would a McGovern-Mondale Democrat really decide that it was worth doing anything except running?

Just a few months ago, just 4 months ago in September the Congress adopted an 18-month resolution, and it tells you a great deal about the leadership of this House. That 18-month resolution binds for 4 months. At that time the Speaker of the House said we should not be partisan. The Speaker of the House said he had contempt for Democrats who were going to be partisan. The Speaker said we must put Lebanon outside of politics, and now, 4 months later, where is it?

Well, as this paper said, the dogs are returned to Harvard, the Speaker endorsed Mondale, and there is a fight over Lebanon in the House of Representatives.

We deliberately tried to schedule a long enough truce to get American foreign policy in the Middle East beyond the election. What has changed in 4 months? Why would we bring it up now?

Our enemies continue to hate us. Terrorists continue to try to kill our men. We have added concrete pillars not only for the marines in Lebanon but we have added concrete around the Capitol and around the White House.

The world is, if anything, more dangerous. A vicious, ruthless dictator Assad pulls the strings of terrorists in Lebanon. And let us be clear about it, not a single marine would die if Assad in Damascus said do not kill them. Not a single opposition shot would be fired at our side if the dictator of Syria wanted to stop it. He controls the Iranian extremists in Lebanon, controls the Druze in Lebanon; he controls all of the forces trying to kill the marines.

For the first time in almost 200 years, the United States is facing state terrorism, not an extremist, not a nut, not a faction, not some weak politician with a bomb.

I have been told that in Iran there are three terrorist camps, as a matter of an act of government policy. We have all seen statements by the leading ayatollahs in Iran, they are recruiting young men and women to kill Americans, to kill Frenchmen, to drive the West to defeat. Deliberately, as an act of policy, they do not use jet aircraft. They use trucks. They do not fight with armed forces in uniforms, and they use civilians who sneak in with bombs. In Libya there are two such camps and I have been told that they are available for rent. Not only does the Libyan Government use them but for a monthly fee will provide you room, board, training, and you get to keep the weapons after you are done with your training.

What does this mean? It means that the combination of Islamic fundamentalism, Arab hatred for Israel and Soviet terrorist activities as taught by the KGB and the Cubans is becoming a stew which threatens the capacity of Western civilization to respond.

What should our response be to state terrorism if they send a young man in and he kills 200 marines? Should we then try to kill 200 Iranians? Or 200 Iraqis? Or 200 Syrians? Or 200 Lebanese?

How does a Western society, a democracy, a country which cherishes its children, respond to a dictatorship which does not care how many of its children die? We clearly cannot exchange our young men for theirs. That is an exchange rate no free society can stand. It is one that we lost in Vietnam and one we would lose in the Middle East.

We do not have a policy for that yet. We have to deal with it. This administration does not have a policy for it, but it at least recognizes it is a problem. The French do not have a policy, but they know it is a problem. They had bombs go off in Marseilles and in their very famous rapid transit train. We are going to have to respond in the West to terrorism. Ironically the Marines probably understand the historical perspective because the "Marine Corps Hymn" talks about "the shores of Tripoli," shores which the Marines went to the last time in that part of the world that there were barbaric states that preyed upon Americans.

There was a quote back then, a toast which said "Millions for defense but not one cent for tribute."

Thomas Jefferson, possibly one of our most pacifist Presidents, a man who at one point would embargo American trade to avoid offending the British, would lock up American ships to avoid a war, nonetheless felt pushed to the limit by the barbarians that he had to send the Marines. We were a much smaller and much weaker country then and the Barbary coast was much further away. But he sent the Marines to the shores of Tripoli. They cleaned up bandits, and pirates, and they changed the politics of the Mediterranean.

What would the McGovern-Mondale response have been? "Millions for tribute, but not one cent for defense"?

I spoke recently at a Veterans Day meeting and at the Marine Corps birthday ball in Atlanta. A young man in my district was killed in Beirut. A young man at the Marine Corps birthday ball had been wounded in Grenada. The public information officer in Beirut at the time so many of our young men were killed by the truck with the terrorist in it, Major Jordan, comes from my district.

Both at the Veterans Day and at the birthday ball I drew an analogy with "Gunsmoke."

I reminded the group, particularly the marines, that freedom starts with the willingness to stop evil, that peace starts with the willingness to suppress violence, that free societies exist because they are willing to stand up to barbarians, and that democracies survive because they are willing to stop dictatorships.

Should we go starting fights? No. Should we be strong enough so that no one comes looking for a fight with us? Yes.

I reminded everyone that the television show "Gunsmoke," which ran for 17 years, began every night that it was on television with Matt Dillon as the U.S. Marshal standing in the street drawing and shooting a bad man who was trying to kill him.

Well, "Gunsmoke" normally had very little violence, it was really sort of a soap opera with cowboys and people sat around the saloon and talked with Kitty, and "Doc" dropped by. The premise was that Dodge City was peaceful because there was a marshal.

The show began not with Matt Dillon saying "I guess I had better leave now, you might hurt me." It did not begin with the marshal running away from town and not by hiding. The show did not begin with 12 people gang-raping Kitty or the marshal said, "Gee, we cannot get involved, the ACLU will get upset." The show began with the force of the United States as embodied in a marshal who wore a badge standing and saying "If I have to I will stop you." Because that is what justice and freedom demands.

Irving Krystal, in a brilliant speech the other evening, pointed out how far we had come from Marshal Dillon and from the courage that America could stand up for its beliefs.

He pointed out that he had read recently an article about piracy in the South China Sea and about the fact that as people tried to flee the communism which defeated us in South Vietnam. As they get in boats and go across that ocean, over half of them are now stopped by pirates, that virtually every woman is raped and if they are young enough they are abducted and never seen again and either sold into prostitution or killed.

Irving Krystal made the point that we have not seen piracy as a public act in 200 years, and that between the British Navy and the American Navy for two centuries the Western World has been able to police the high seas. It is not a question of stopping somebody else in their own country. It is illegal under international law to be a pirate.

Any navy in the world at any point that it intercepts a pirate can stop them, and sink the ship. Let me assure you that one or two American task forces sweeping the South China Sea would rather quickly stop piracy, and stop the raping of young girls who are fleeing the communism which defeated us because the McGovern-Mondale wing in this Congress cut off aid to South Vietnam.

Irving Krystal is a man who lived through seeing millions of Jews killed by Adolph Hitler while nothing was done until too late, a man who has lived through the entire history of Israel's struggle for survival despite the McGovern-Mondale type weakness, a man who probably does not appreciate Jessie Jackson's point that Jessie Jackson accepts Israel's right to exist because Irving Krystal thought Israel had earned its own right to exist by its own strength of character and effort.

Irving Krystal stood and said to the audience he felt ashamed as an American to know that young women are fleeing communism because we lack the will to win, and that they cannot even flee communism in safety because we lack the will to police and that knowing about it, nothing is done.

I was reminded of the great moment in the rise of the Wesleyan movement in the Methodist Church when Wesley was able to convince a leading politician that slavery was wrong. Then, the antislavery movement was created as a direct outgrowth of the rise of the Methodist Church and for the first time about 200 years ago people stood up and said, "We must stamp out slavery across this planet."

You know, the victory of evil is not inevitable.

George Bernard Shaw said that all that is required for evil to succeed is for good men to do nothing, and good men in the McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic Party are quite willing to do nothing, because the McGovern-Mondale philosophy does not recognize evil at home or abroad, they do not recognize evil in cocaine dealing which is why they are not for strong laws on crime, they do not recognize evil in violent crimes which is why they are not willing to lock up violent criminals. They do not recognize that evil exists and can only be stopped by a return to traditional values, including prayer and patriotism.

Just today I asked the distinguished Democratic whip why we could not bring up prayer in school next week. It is after all a very light week, not much happening. He said, "Well, we brought it up once before, in 1969," at a time when I was in college and one of my colleagues yelled out that she was in grammar school.

I suggested that we could bring it up more often than once in a generation, that prayer in school has some purpose, just as patriotism has some purpose.

It is possible to bring up a purely demagogic political document on Lebanon in 1 week. It is possible to draft it on a Wednesday morning in the Democratic Caucus and order it in the Foreign Affairs Committee on a Thursday, but it is not possible to bring up prayer in school in 15 years.

The McGovern-Mondale wing does not recognize that there really is evil, evil in the cocaine dealer, evil in the violent criminal, evil abroad, that the Khomeini regime with its persecution of people who do not agree with it is an evil regime; that Assad is an evil dictator; that Qadhafi is an evil dictator; that Castro has a police state; that as President Reagan said earlier, Moscow is in charge of an evil empire. And the KGB, a secret police force that today has 2 million Russian people as slave laborers working today. This not 100 years ago, not 30 years ago under Stalin—today, there are 2 million Russians working is slave labor camps.

The McGovern-Mondale wing does not recognize evil at home or evil abroad.

But let me say something which I think is even more troubling. They also do not recognize the role of television in foreign policy. Let me be clear. What is at stake on the Lebanon debate with the McGovern-Mondale wing is not a matter of philosophy. They are risking the death of American soldiers and the collapse of Western interests in the Middle East. Every dictatorship in the World now has embassies in Washington that watch television, that read the newspapers, that analyze the American politicians.

If this House passes a resolution next week, this is not the Democratic Convention, this is not a Walter Mondale political rally, this is the Congress of the United States. And if we pass a partisan political document it is not going to be read as a campaign brochure in Syria, it is going to be read across the entire Third World by terrorist groups as a statement of American official policy by one branch of the American Government.

If terrorists come to think they can kill Americans and we will run, they are going to kill more Americans. If we think we have problems now, let the word get out in Iran, and in Libya, and among the Irish Republican Army, and in other areas of the world if you want to get the Americans to do something, go drive a truck in and kill some of them, go shoot one or two of them, and not an American on this planet will be safe overseas. And if you think we are safe here at home, then walk outside this Capitol and look at those concrete pillars. They are not there as a game. The are there because we are no longer safe anywhere on the planet because terrorists know how to buy jet airplane tickets and terrorists know how to ride on boats and terrorists can come here.

If the oil states in the Persian Gulf decide we lack the will to help them against Iran or the Soviet Union or against terrorists, the oil states are going to go neutral. They are not going to help us. They are not going to favor us. They are not going to work with us.

Jimmy Carter already gave us gasoline lines once. And his understudy Walter Mondale, with this kind of McGovern-Mondale foreign policy is doing all he can to give us gasoline lines again.

If Israel's survival is threatened as the Soviets move into a power vacuum created by our collapse and withdrawal from Lebanon, and if Israel no longer is capable of defending itself against what are already 5 to 8,000 Russian troops in Syria, and notice again, if there are 55 Americans in El Salvador, that is a crisis for the McGovern-Mondale wing. If there are 2,000 Cubans in Nicaragua that is not noticed.

If there are 1,200 Americans in Beirut that is a crisis with the McGovern-Mondale wing. If there are 8,000 Soviets in Syria that is not noticed.

No one at Harvard for the McGovern-Mondale wing said anything about what the Soviets are doing. The Soviets apparently do nothing that really matters to the McGovern-Mondale wing.

The McGovern-Mondale Democrats have been wrong on every major foreign policy crisis for a decade and we have the trophies to prove it: Ho Chi Minh City instead of Saigon; death in Cambodia instead of a pro-Western government; yellow rain chemical warfare in Laos by the Soviets; Soviet troops in Afghanistan; Cuban troops in Africa, American hostages in Iran, a Communist dictatorship in Nicaragua. These were the bitter fruits of the McGovern-Mondale Democratic policies of the last decade.

Now the same men would add a Communist El Salvador, a Syrian and Soviet-controlled Lebanon, an embattled Israel, and a neutralized Persian Gulf.

It is this large choice between a policy of weakness, collapse, fear, and isolation on the part of the McGovern-Mondale Democrats; and a policy of strength, firmness, and determination to pursue peace with freedom which is really at stake next week in this House when it takes up the McGovern-Mondale Democratic proposals for an immediate and precipitous withdrawal from Lebanon.

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GINGRICH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank my colleague from Georgia for yielding.

I would like to compliment him on not just a thoughtful statement, but a truly courageous and statesmanlike approach to a very difficult issue.

One of the things that always strikes me is that most of us here in the Congress of the United States have very little reason to address foreign policy issues. We get elected and reelected based on issues that are of direct concern to our friends and neighbors and can most often manage our political affairs without addressing the basic foreign policy issues that affect our country.

The President, on the other hand, has the responsibility for conducting the foreign policy and does not have the luxury of ducking those issues.

So it is truly unfortunate when we find many of our colleagues seeking to address foreign policy issues only in the context of an attack, politically motivated, on the President of the United States and his policy.

I think that the gentleman makes a particularly important point in contrasting the views of the McGovern-Mondale Democratic Party with the John F. Kennedy Democratic Party. And I think what it comes down to is that modern liberalism is no longer based on pride and responsibility as it was when Kennedy was President.

Now the McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic Party reflects a foreign policy based instead on guilt and insecurity.

If you think about the debates that we go through in this Congress and that we hear in the political community at large, just think about the presumptions that underlie the thinking of the McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic Party. In the arms race it is not the Soviet buildup as documented as that is that is the cause of the arms race, it is the United States response to that buildup suddenly that becomes the cause of the arms race. We are responsible. It is not the Soviets who are responsible for the icing of relations between our two countries, not their invasion of Afghanistan, not their suppression of Poland, not their use of yellow rain chemical weapons in Afghanistan and Laos; it is the United States and the Reagan administration who do not countenance such behavior that suddenly become responsible for the bad state of relations between the United States and the Soviet Union, reflections of the guilt that too many Americans in the McGovern-Mondale wing of the Democratic Party unfortunately feel about the role that America plays in the world.

And in that context it is particularly unfortunate that we are going to apparently let that kind of thinking pervade our actions on Lebanon next week. And I say it is particularly unfortunate because Speaker O'NEILL for a short period, managed to rise above that kind of thinking.

And I think it is worth recalling for the RECORD his statements—not so long ago—on September 28, 1983, when he stood in the well of the House in a patriotic and bipartisan appeal for support for the policy that we are now conducting in Lebanon.

And I would just like to quote from that statement of some 4 short months ago.

The Speaker said:

I support the amendment as offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I rise in support of this resolution because I believe, first, that withdrawal of all foreign troops from Lebanon and the establishment of a free sovereign independent Lebanon is a very real possibility.

Second, I believe that the presence of the multinational force in Beirut promotes peace in the area and helps the process of national reconstruction of Lebanon.

Was this just an off-end comment? No, the Speaker went on to say:

I have put serious effort and thought into these remarks that I am making today. I believe that as a result of the current ceasefire and the resignation of the Cabinet in Lebanon, the government in Beirut will make every effort to show it will serve and represent the interests and the rights of all of the people in Lebanon.

I believe this resolution clearly limits the scope and the role of the U.S. Forces in Lebanon so that the danger of a Vietnam-type escalation is avoided.

Furthermore, the resolution that was passed on that day which constructs the context in which American foreign policy toward Lebanon is now conducted is the responsibility in large measure of the Speaker of the Democratic Party.

The Speaker went on later to say, referring to himself and the Democratic Party:

So we are the ones who came up, after consideration of our Committee on Foreign Affairs and our leaders, and their staff, working with the White House, on the 18 months. It was a hard decision to make, but I thought it was the best one.

Later on, the Speaker goes on to say:

My colleagues, I have risen on many occasions over the last 2 years to oppose the President, and on several occasions when I believed him to be right I supported him. In this case, he initiated contact with me. You, the Members on the side of the aisle, you elected me as the Speaker of the House and JIM WRIGHT as your leader. We were speaking for you not as Democrats, but what we thought was truly right as Americans, that it was time to act in a bipartisan manner. And so he contacted me, he wanted congressional support for his policies in Lebanon. I am willing to pledge my support as long as the War Powers Act is adhered to.

The debate here today is solemn and serious, and the concerns expressed are deeply held. The fate of a nation, Lebanon, awaits our action. This is not an easy decision for anyone. But, believe me, it is a necessary one, and a necessary one for our country and for the rest of the world.

And in closing his remarks, the Speaker made, I think, a very powerful statement:

I hope we will act today to help the President to bring peace and stability in Lebanon, a country worthy of our attention, a country worthy of our assistance, a country worthy of our best efforts. I hope the resolution is adopted.

The Speaker in that closing statement sounded, if I might say so, almost Kennedyesque in terms of the statement the gentleman of Georgia quoted from President Kennedy some time earlier. He talked about America's moral responsibility in the world.

And the point that I am making nothing has basically changed in the situation in the 4 short months that have elapsed since the Speaker made that statement in the well of the House of Representatives. yet, now we find the Speaker has changed course 180 degrees and he is going to lead the Democratic Party basically in support of a resolution calling for a full scale reversal of American policy in the Middle East.

In many ways, it should not come as any surprise to us that the Mondale-McGovern Democrats, now led by the Speaker in the House of Representatives, base their foreign policy on guilt and insecurity. That is also, as the gentleman from Georgia has pointed out, their policy toward domestic violence. They are guilty about American wealth, so their attitude toward criminals is that the rest of us, as law abiding citizens, are responsible for criminals' guilty behavior because somehow they have not gotten the upbringing they should, so we cannot punish criminals, we cannot infringe upon their liberties, and the victims of crime have to just live with it.

It is, in many ways, fitting that the party that says in terms of its foreign policy, as George McGovern did in 1972, that our policy should be "Come home America," when they are speaking to Americans at home with regard to crime says, basically, "Stay home America, because you are not going to be safe anywhere else." And that is just too bad. It is indeed a low state of affairs that our country has come to.

Mr. GINGRICH. I appreciate the gentleman's comments. Let me just say that he makes a good point. Speaker O'NEILL, of course, does represent John F. Kennedy's seat in the Congress. Historically, President Kennedy was the most articulate Democrat since Franklin Roosevelt. In explaining that freedom does matter, during this famous trip to Berlin when he looked at the Berlin Wall, that horrible testimony to the Soviet police state and its habits in East Germany, he said, "Ich bein ein Berliner," and he then said, "We are all Berliners."

What he meant by that was that freedom is inseparable, that wherever freedom dies on the planet, America dies a little bit. But as long as America is strong and courageous and bold, freedom will survive on the planet.

In closing, I would just ask the people of the country and the Members of this House to think for a minute about the scenes we see on television, about the people who come here to see us, about the African freedom fighters, men and women who have lost their children, their families, in some cases entire villages, about the refugees from Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, who have joined us, many of whom have left behind loved ones, about the pictures we have seen of the children in Beirut who have been severely wounded, crippled, in some cases losing an arm or a leg. So many children have been crippled that there are now doctors who specialize in helping young people acquire an artifical arm or an artifical leg.

Imagine a child of 9 or 10 living in a world, as someone said, that to get from home to school means that you avoid the snipers, the mines, the terrorists, the bombs, and the artillery shells, until you get to your schoolroom, where you may be hit by bombs or mines or artillery shells. What a life that is. And yet everywhere in the world people who want to be free or people who are free understand one basic truth: That as long as America is courageous, as long as America is strong, as long as America is willing to be their friend, as long as, in Franklin Roosevelt's term, we are a good neighbor, freedom may survive. But freedom will not survive anywhere if we cut and run. There will be no freedom in Lebanon if we leave, because the Syrians will move in and the Soviet advisers will move in. There is not more freedom in Iran today because the United States pulled out. There is less freedom. There is not more freedom in Nicaragua because we are not there. There is less freedom. Does anyone truly believe that Cuba is freer than it was before Castro?

We are at a great choice in 1984, a choice between a McGovern-Mondale policy of withdrawal, of being a bad neighbor, repudiating Franklin Roosevelt, repudiating Harry Truman, repudiating John F. Kennedy, and a policy which in the bipartisan tradition saved the West, that stopped the Soviet dictatorship, that preserved freedom in Japan, in South Korea, in Europe, that is trying to find the right path through a difficult world, to continue to move forward.

And for us to turn this House of Representatives, with its televised proceedings, with the news media watching, into a political battleground for the McGovern-Mondale campaign brochure, while American soldiers and marines are on real battlegrounds, is an act so shallow, so shortsighted, so lacking in commonsense, that if it were not happening, one could not write about it in a novel.

I hope that in the next week this House will come to its senses, the Democratic leadership will decide to revert to Speaker O'NEILL's earlier statement of patriotism and bipartisanship, will pull the resolution and conclude that, in fact, freedom is more important than votes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

YOUTH OF RUFFIN, S.C., DISPLAY UNSELFISH BRAVERY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. HARTNETT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Speaker, on October 27, 1983, in the little town of Ruffin in the First District of South Carolina, an event took place which I feel worthy of note. On that day, a group of young students in my district bolstered my faith in the basic values of our American youth.

Returning home from Smoaks Middle School and Ruffin High School, these students spotted a burning house by the roadside. They stopped their school bus and entered the house at great personal risk. Although the house was totally destroyed, these young heroes saved the life and some of the possessions of Mrs. Ottie Parnell.

In their hometown, these young people were honored by a front page newspaper account of their heroism. Such unselfish bravery deserves the greatest exposure we can give. Their display of courage is contrary to the general public image of the young people of today. Congratulations to and may God bless all these young heroes. They are: Kennard Capers, Irvin Jones, Quintone Wrice, Willie Haynes, Terry Haynes, Barry Capers, Andre Capers, Ronald Grant, Dondi Jones, Gale Joyner, Lonvondee Bryant, Marion Capers and Alphonse Bryant.●

THE AGRICULTURAL EXPORT TRADE EQUITY ACT OF 1984

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SILJANDER) is recognized for 60 minutes.

● Mr. SILJANDER. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing the Agricultural Export Trade Equity Act of 1984 in efforts to give the U.S. Government more strength when dealing with foreign export subsidies that are taking markets away from the American farmer. It is estimated that the Europeans alone are costing U.S. agriculture more than $5 billion each year in lost exports, and if something is not done soon the loss could reach $8 billion by 1987. The Economic Research Service at USDA published a report entitled "High-Value Agricultural Exports: U.S. Opportunities in the 1980's." This report emphasizes that the European Community has dominated trade in high-value products due to their aggressive export promotion and export subsidies.

There are no costs to the taxpayer in this bill. In fact, it should provide a savings in the long run, since it will increase dairy product sales and reduce the cost for storage. In addition, this legislation will bring added revenues to the Federal Government. This bill is designed to expand markets for U.S. agricultural products through increased targeting of Commodity Credit Corporation export funds; expanded exports of Commodity Credit Corporation dairy products; and expanded authority for the use of Commodity Credit Corporation stocks to facilitate export sales; to emphasize the need for increased exports of processed and protein fortified agricultural products; and for other purposes.

The bill has four parts. First, it targets existing export assistance funds for those commodities and products that have been adversely affected by foreign export subsidies. The commodities that could be made available include wheat, feed, grains, upland cotton, rice, milk, and their products, and any other agricultural commodities or products acquired by the Commodity Credit Corporation. Second, it provides for the shipment of 100,000 tons of dairy products in fiscal year 1984 and 1985. It authorizes an export payment-in-kind program, and it encourages the use of processed, value added products in Public Law 480.

The bill's counter part in the Senate is S. 2005, introduced by Senator JESSE HELMS, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

There is broad support for the content of this legislation. Those expressing support are: Corn Refiners Association, Dairymen, Inc., Millers National Federation, National Association of Wheat Growers, National Broiler Council, National Council of Farmer Cooperatives, National Grange, National Milk Producers Federation, National Pasta Association, Rice Millers Federation, the Fertilizer Institute, and United Egg Producers.●

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF CONGRESS THAT OUR U.N. DELEGATION SHOULD INTRODUCE A RESOLUTION TO ESTABLISH A U.N. PEACEKEEPING FORCE TO REPLACE THE MULTINATIONAL FORCE IN BEIRUT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. MCKINNEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MCKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, last week I introduced House Concurrent Resolution 242, which expresses the sense of the Congress that our United Nations delegation should introduce a resolution to establish a U.N. peacekeeping force to replace the multinational force (MF) currently stationed in Beirut. It is clear, on the one hand, that the sudden withdrawal of the MF would precipitate a resumption of full-scale hostilities, threatening to nullify the heroic efforts of the troops currently deployed in Beirut. It is equally clear that the marines have become as much a part of the immediate problems in Lebanon as the warring factions themselves. We can balance our commitment to Lebanese sovereignty and our pressing desire to see our embattled marines come home through the creation of a neutral, U.N.-sponsored force. With the passage of the Lebanon resolution last September, Congress expressed its desire to hold discussions within the United Nations on possible creation of a peacekeeping force in Beirut. Those discussions have been held. It is time to proceed and introduce such a resolution in the United Nations.

I plan to submit House Concurrent Resolution 242 as a bipartisan substitute to the proposed resolution calling for the abrupt withdrawal of the marines, should such a resolution come before the House. I believe that many of my colleagues, on both sides of the aisle, would like to urge the President to act on the already discussed plans to create a U.N. force to replace the MF. Acting through the United Nations, we can fullfill our desire to bring the marines home without backing out of our commitments in the troubled Middle East.

The resolution follows:

H. CON. RES. 242

Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the President should direct the United States Ambassador to the United Nations to introduce a resolution in the United Nations Security Council to establish a United Nations peacekeeping force to replace the multinational peacekeeping force now deployed in Beirut, Lebanon

Whereas the world community recognizes the importance of an independent and sovereign Lebanon and the need for peace and stability in the Middle East;

Whereas the current Multinational Force in Lebanon is composed of troops from the United States, United Kingdom, France, and Italy, and was deployed in Beirut to stabilize the area;

Whereas each country that volunteered troops can be proud that their men served to the best of their ability under extremely difficult and dangerous conditions;

Whereas a United Nations peacekeeping force in which many member nations are participants can better fulfill a neutral peacekeeping role;

Whereas the United Nations Interim Force in Lebanon is composed of personnel from seven countries and has been deployed in southern Lebanon for the past five years; and

Whereas the United States would be fully supportive of a United Nations peacekeeping force: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that the President should direct the United States Ambassador to the United Nations to introduce a resolution in the United Nations Security Council to establish a United Nations peacekeeping force to replace the Multinational Force in Lebanon.●

ANALYSIS OF FISCAL YEAR 1985 DEFENSE BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. ADDABBO) is recognized for 60 minutes.

● Mr. ADDABBO. Mr. Speaker, for the interest of my colleagues, I would like to give my analysis of the fiscal year 1985 Defense budget. My remarks were to have appeared in yesterday's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of February 1, 1984, pursuant to my unanimous consent, but they were inadvertently excluded from the RECORD by the Public Printer.

I commend my colleague, Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama, for his remarks of yesterday concerning the fiscal year 1985 Defense budget. As he well knows, we will have our differences over the Defense budget throughout the year.

I believe there are many proper request for production in the budget, but there are also many examples of improper requests for production of certain weapons systems, such as the B–1 bomber and the MX missile to name a few. These weapons systems are not needed, and do not add to our national defense.

There can be little justification for a 17- to 18-percent increase in Defense budget requests when the President's budget for fiscal 1985 shows reductions in so many human need programs as depicted in the following list of major program reductions and eliminations:

FISCAL YEAR 1985 DEFENSE BUDGET

The fiscal year 1985 Defense budget estimate for those items included in the annual Defense appropriations bill totals $292.2 billion, which excludes in excess of $3 billion estimated for contingencies consisting mostly of pay raise costs. The fiscal year 1985 Defense budget represents an increase of $42.4 billion more than the $249.8 billion appropriated and made available to date for fiscal year 1984. The fiscal year 1985 request is 17 percent more than the fiscal year 1984 appropriations.

The press release of Secretary of Defense Weinberger alludes to a real increase in fiscal year 1985 budget authority of 13 percent after adjustments for anticipated inflation. This real increase, of course, refers to the total Department of Defense budget which includes military construction, family housing, and certain supplementals and contingencies anticipated in both fiscal years 1984 and 1985.

The figures supplied by the Department of Defense anticipate proposed supplementals for fiscal year 1984 of $2.3 billion, of which $1.8 billion for increased pay costs has already been transmitted to Congress in January 1984. The remaining $500 million is contained in the fiscal 1985 budget appendix, and would be used to cover costs associated with military operations in Lebanon and Grenada, and with revised health benefits, social security taxes and disability compensation.

The Department of Defense figures also include an amount in excess of $3 billion for fiscal year 1985 to cover civilian and military pay raises and other legislative proposals. The budget proposes a military pay raise of 5.5 percent, and a civilian pay raise of 3.5 percent both effective in January 1985.

The outlays estimated in the accounts covered in the annual Defense appropriations bill total $254.1 billion for fiscal year 1985 as compared with $224.9 billion in fiscal year 1984 to date. The $29.2 billion increase in outlays in fiscal year 1985 equates to a 13-percent increase which is not quite as sharp an increase as the 17-percent increase projected in budget authority. This simply means that unexpended balances will continue to grow in the various Defense accounts.

The budget authority increase in fiscal year 1985 over fiscal 1984 for the Defense bill alone, is distributed by military service as follows:

[In billions of dollars]

	Fiscal year—		Increase
	1984	1985
Army	59.1	74.5	+15.4
Navy	79.1	98.6	+19.5
Air Force	82.9	105.4	+22.5
OSD/Defense agencies	10.7	13.7	+3.0

Another interesting comparison is the budget authority increase in fiscal year 1985 over fiscal 1984 for the Defense bill alone as distributed by appropriation accounts.

[In billions of dollars]

	Fiscal year—		Increase	Percentage increase
	1984	1985
Operation and maintenance	72.5	82.7	+10.2	+14.0
Procurement	85.6	107.6	+22.0	+25.7
Research, Development, test and evaluation	26.7	34.0	+7.3	+27.3

The above figures emphasize the trend toward large growth rates in the investment accounts—procurment and RDT&E—while the operation and maintenance accounts receive much smaller increases. This situation will result in the need to provide large amounts of funds in the outyears to pay for these major weapons systems resulting in less funding availability for the troops in the field and other readiness programs. Readiness will have to suffer further in order to finance this "bow wave" of new weapons systems coming on line in future years.

MILITARY PERSONNEL/MILITARY RETIRED PAY

Overall funding for active and reserve manpower requirements and military retired pay increases by about $2.5 billion to a total of $67.8 billion for fiscal year 1985. A summary table follows:

SUMMARY OF BUDGET REQUEST FOR ACTIVE AND RESERVE FORCES AND MILITARY RETIRED PAY

[In millions of dollars]

	Fiscal year 1983	Fiscal year 1984			Fiscal year 1985	Change
		Enacted	Supplementals and transfers	Total
Mil. pers	45,638	47,360	1,214	48,574	[1] 67,832	[1] +19,258
Ret. pay	15,954	16,593	202	16,795	0	−16,795
Total	61,592	63,953	1,416	65,369	67,832	+2,463

[1] Includes $16,913 in military retired pay under new accrual accounting procedures begun in fiscal year 1985.

Included in the above amounts for military personnel are their pay and allowances plus the funds required to move personnel between duty stations and the funds needed to provide subsistence to enlisted personnel.

The major increases in the military personnel budget result from the 29,900 increase in active duty end strengths and 52,200 increase in reserve component end strengths. There are also increases resulting from annualization of the fiscal year 1984 pay raise and new initiatives on the part of the Defense Department concerning the variable housing allowance, bonuses and permanent change of station (PCS) travel.

The Department has provided for a 5.5-percent military pay raise effective January 1, 1985, within the defensewide contingency portion of the overall budget request. If approved, this pay raise would add $2.4 billion to the military personnel accounts.

It is important to note the offsetting increases and decreases between the military personnel and military retired pay accounts. Effective in fiscal year 1985, the Defense Department will begin to budget for military retired pay under accrual accounting procedures. Under this concept, the Defense budget will make payments to a military retirement trust fund for the accruing liability for retirement payments to personnel currently on active duty. Payments to individual retirees will be made from the trust fund under the income security function of the Federal budget. Since the Defense Department no longer makes payments to individual retirees, the military retired pay appropriation was terminated. Accrued retirement liability costs are included in the military personnel appropriations. As a result of this change, the defense budget will reflect the retirement costs of current active duty forces, a truer picture of the cost of today's defense.

SUMMARY OF ACTIVE DUTY END STRENGTH

	1983 actual	1984 estimate	1985 estimate	Change fiscal years 1984–85
Army	779,643	780,000	780,800	+800
Navy	557,573	564,800	575,300	+10,500
Marine Corps	194,089	196,600	199,500	+2,900
Air Force	592,044	594,500	610,200	+15,700
Total, Defense active duty	2,123,349	2,135,900	2,165,800	+29,900

End strength for the active forces is proposed to increase by 29,900 in fiscal year 1985 to a total of 2,165,800. Retention and recruiting experience in recent years has been excellent. End strength goals have been achieved and quality has improved. Even with the pay raise being capped at 4 percent, the military departments anticipate achieving their strength goals for fiscal year 1984. An important issue to be addressed for fiscal year 1985 is the impact on recruiting and retention of a number of factors: The improving economy, the successive military pay caps, and military compensation legislation.

SUMMARY OF GUARD AND RESERVE END STRENGTH

	Fiscal year 1983 actual	Fiscal year 1984 estimate	Fiscal year 1985 estimate	Change fiscal years 1984–85
Army Reserve	266,188	278,117	298,447	+20,330
Navy Reserve	109,094	122,496	128,800	+6,304
Marine Corps Reserve	42,690	43,883	46,447	+2,564
Air Force Reserve	67,227	69,880	74,829	+4,949
Army National Guard	417,178	433,000	447,283	+14,283
Air National Guard	102,170	104,104	107,890	+3,786
Total	1,004,547	1,051,480	1,103,696	+52,216

End strength for the Guard and Reserves is proposed to increase by 52,216 to a total of 1,103,696 for fiscal year 1985. The proposed increases result from additional full-time support personnel of 19,263, additional individual mobilization augmentees of 3,600, and additional paid drilling reservists of 29,353. One of the major issues to again be addressed in fiscal year 1985 is the mix of full-time support personnel between Active Guard/Reserve (AGR) and military—civilian—technicians, especially since the Department has requested an increase in AGR's only.

OPERATIONS AND MAINTENANCE

In the operations and maintenance area, the budget requests $82.7 billion in fiscal year 1985, an increase of $10.1 billion or 14 percent above the $72.5 billion already appropriated for fiscal year 1983. In addition, the administration has announced that it will be requesting fiscal year 1984 supplementals totaling $872.2 million for pay and program increases. In real terms, the fiscal year 1985 request for O&M is up 10.7 percent and is larger than any amount since the final year of World War II when we had over 12 million troops in combat all over the globe. In fiscal year 1985 DOD will have only 2,166,000 personnel on active duty.

These appropriations finance the costs of operating and maintaining the Armed Forces, including the Reserve components and related support activities of the Department of Defense, except military personnel costs. Included are amounts for pay of civilians, contract services for maintenance of equipment and facilities, fuel, supplies, and repair parts for weapons and equipment. Financial requirements are influenced by many factors, including force levels such as the number of aircraft squadrons, Army or Marine Corps divisions, installations, military strength and deployments, rates of operational activity, and quantity and complexity of major equipment—aircraft, ships, missiles, tanks, et cetera—in operations.

The budget as proposed for fiscal year 1985 provides day-to-day support to meet the higher levels of readiness being recommended. For example, major increases include $2.1 billion for additional depot maintenance performed in-house in DOD industrial activities; $4.5 billion for growth in contracts for depot maintenance, support of new weapons systems, and base maintenance functions; and $2.1 billion supports higher levels of operating tempos, spare parts, supply consumption, and real property maintenance. In addition, an increase of $485 million primarily reflects annualization of the fiscal year 1984 civilian pay raise. The single most significant program change may well be the Army proposal to create a new active light infantry division. It is proposed that the necessary 10,000 personnel for this division will come from within the existing force structure despite past testimony from the Army that existing units are short of personnel.

Since O&M funding provides for near-term readiness, it is no surprise that the major readiness indicators are projected to rise in fiscal year 1985. However, despite real growth of 10.7 percent in the funds being requested, the number of aircraft being operated increases by only 1.2 percent; the flying hours only increase by 3.6 percent; the number of ships increases by 3.8 percent while the steaming hours only increases by 1.8 percent; and finally, the number of battalion training days increases by only 1.8 percent. Although I have traditionally supported increases directly for readiness, I am concerned that readiness items should increase so slightly in a year when O&M as a whole has a real increase of over 10 percent. The committee will diligently analyze this large increase to ferret out the fluff and administrative luxuries that could well be eliminated without adversely impacting on readiness.

The fiscal year 1984 supplemental includes $580.2 million for costs associated with the January 1, 1984, civilian pay raise of 3.5 percent, and $298 million for several fact of life increases. Of particular interest is $72.1 million included to finance the cost of the rescue operation in Grenada and an additional $57.5 million for the unbudgeted costs associated with the continuing peacekeeping forces in Lebanon.

PROCUREMENT

The proposed fiscal year 1985 procurement budget is $107.6 billion, an increase of $21.1 billion or 24.3 percent over the $86.5 billion total funding made available to date in fiscal year 1984. For the third year in a row, the increase for procurement again represents the largest increase of any category in the new Defense budget. The increase is in addition to the 26.4-percent increase in fiscal year 1981 over fiscal year 1980, the 30.5-percent increase in fiscal year 1982 over fiscal year 1981, and the 23.5-percent increase in fiscal year 1983 over fiscal year 1982, and the 6.5-percent increase in fiscal year 1984 over fiscal year 1983. Since fiscal year 1981, the total procurement budget has more than doubled.

The fiscal year 1985 budget continues the trend, begun in fiscal year 1982, of procurement appropriations surpassing the operation and maintenance appropriations as the largest category in the budget.

The fiscal year 1985 budget proposes to delete a separate appropriation for Guard and Reserve equipment procurement which the Congress has provided for the past several years. The budget includes a new appropriation request of $25 million for Defense Production Act purchases.

The Air Force procurement budget is 45 percent of the total and consumes about half of the fiscal year 1985 increase. This reflects the administration's emphasis on strategic programs like the B–1 bomber and MX missile. To put this into perspective, the amount included for the B–1 alone is greater than the total of any of the Army procurement appropriations; it is more than twice the total for Army ammunition and three times the total for all Marine Corps procurement.

The fiscal year 1985 budget includes about $105 million in production-related funding for binary chemical weapons. A $124.4 million request for this purpose was denied by Congress last year.

While the total procurement budget of $107.6 billion is huge, it is $15.1 billion less than was projected for fiscal year 1985 when the fiscal year 1984 budget was submitted a year ago.

ARMY PROCUREMENT

The Army consumes 19 percent of the procurement budget in fiscal year 1985, a total of $21 billion. This is an increase of $3.6 billion, or 20 percent over the amounts made available in the current fiscal year.

The Army aircraft procurement budget is $4 billion, an increase of $794 million, or 25 percent over last year. The total number of aircraft to be procured is 260, including 18 EH-60A Quickfix helicopters, 144 AH-64 attack helicopters, 78 UH-60A Blackhawk helicopters, 11 CH-47 Chinook helicopters, and 9 RC-12D Guardrail aircraft. This compares with a total of 214 aircraft funded last year.

The aircraft spares and repair parts budget goes from $599.4 million to $633.4 million, a 6-percent increase.

The Army missile procurement budget is $3.4 billion, an increase of $587.1 million, or 21 percent over last year. Over 77,000 missiles are budgeted, compared with about 61,000 in the current year. Included in the budget are 93 Pershing II missiles, 585 Patriot air defense missiles, 2,360 Stinger missiles, 6,026 Laser Hellfire air-to-surface missiles, and 18,000 TOW antitank missiles. The budget also includes a continuation of the multiyear contract for the multiple launch rocket system, with 50,472 missiles to be procured.

The budget for procurement of weapons and tracked combat vehicles is $5.1 billion, an increase of $349.6 million, or 7 percent over last year, the smallest increase of any of the Army procurement appropriations. Over 2,000 tracked combat vehicles are budgeted, slightly more than the number funded in the current fiscal year. The new budget provides for procurement of 710 Bradley fighting vehicles, and 720 M-1 tanks, a decrease from the 840 funded in the current fiscal year. The budget also provides for procurement of command post carriers, armored personnel carriers, artillery ammunition support vehicles, self-propelled howitzers, and recovery vehicles. For weapons and other combat vehicles, the budget provides $936 million, about the same as the current year. The budget provides for procurement of 132 Sergeant York air defense systems.

The Army ammunition procurement budget is $2.5 billion, an increase of $513.9 million, or 26 percent over last year. Upgraded 81-millimeter mortar and 105-millimeter tank ammunition are being introduced, and production rates for new 120-millimeter tank ammunition are being increased. The budget for production base support increases from $155 million to $302 million, with a large portion of the increase going to chemical weapon production facilities.

The other procurement, Army budget is $6 billion, an increase of $1.3 billion, or 29 percent. For the second year in a row, this is the largest Army procurement increase in absolute and percentage terms and continues as the largest of the Army procurement appropriations. The increase is spread about evenly among the three budget activities: tactical and support vehicles, electronic and telecommunications equipment, and other support equipment. Procurement of remotely piloted vehicles and related electronic equipment is budgeted for the first time in fiscal year 1985.

NAVY PROCUREMENT

The Navy procurement request of $37.2 billion represents nearly 35 percent of the total procurement budget in fiscal year 1985. This is an increase of $5.7 billion, or 18 percent from the amounts made available in the current fiscal year.

The Navy aircraft procurement budget is $11.5 billion, an increase of $1.3 billion, or 13 percent over last year. The total number of aircraft to be procured is 287 compared with 230 funded in the current year. Overall, the aircraft budget includes the procurement of 6 A-6E and 6 EA-6B aircraft, 32 AV-8B V/STOL aircraft for the Marine Corps, 84 F-18 aircraft, 24 F-14 aircraft, 10 CH-53E heavy lift helicopters, 18, SH-60B Seahawk helicopters, 9 P-3C Orion aircraft, 6 E-2C Hawkeye aircraft, 8 C-2 COD aircraft, and 8 Adversary aircraft. The aircraft modification budget increases from $1.4 billion to $1.9 billion, and the spares and repair parts budget decreases $440 million from $2 billion to $1.6 billion.

The Navy request for procurement of weapons is $4.7 billion, an increase of $848 million, or 22 percent, over the amount provided for last year. No Trident I missiles are requested, reflecting phasedown of that system and preparation for production in future years of the new Trident II ballistic missile. A total of 180 sea-launched Tomahawk cruise missiles are requested, up from the 124 provided last year. The total number of tactical missiles, which includes a variety of airborne and shipborne weapons, is requested to rise by 78 percent, from the 3,700 total units funded last year to 6,600 units in the current budget. There also is a 26-percent increase in funding for torpedoes and other related equipment. The most significant increases relates directly to the multiyear procurement of the MK-46 torpedo modification program.

The shipbuilding and conversion budget is $13.1 billion, an increase of $1.7 billion, or 15 percent from last year. A total of 38 vessels—new construction, conversion, and major craft—are included in the budget request, which includes the procurement of one Trident submarine, the unprecedented annual procurement of 4 SSN-688 attack submarines, 3 Aegis cruisers, 2 LSD-41 landing ships, 4 mine countermeasures ships, 3 T-AO fleet oilers, and 3 Surtass ships, 2 surveying ships, and 9 LCAC landing craft. Although no funds are being requested for cost growth, a new category called potential cost growth is in this years request and represents a request of $187 million.

The other procurement, Navy budget is nearly $6 billion, an increase of 38 percent over last year. The increase is spread across the entire spectrum of budget activities in this multifaceted appropriation.

The Marine Corps procurement budget is almost $2 billion, an increase of $237 million, or about 14 percent from last year. Increases are included for ammunition—8 percent—guided missiles and equipment—65 percent—and engineering and support—31 percent. The budget provides for procurement of 4 LVT-7 amphibious assault vehicles and 240 LVT-7 service life extensions, 292 light armored vehicles, 500 Hawk missiles, 800 Stinger missiles, and 3,822 TOW missiles.

I believe as we study the Navy budget request, we must consider expanding our merchant fleet which is so necessary to our national defense.

AIR FORCE PROCUREMENT

The Air Force consumes 45 percent of the procurement budget in fiscal year 1985, a total of $48.1 billion. This is an increase of $11.9 billion, or 33 percent over the amounts made available in the current fiscal year. The Air Force consumes the largest portion of the procurement budget, a fact accounted for in large measure by the procurement programs for the MX missile, tactical fighter aircraft, and the B-1 bomber.

The Air Force aircraft procurement budget is $28.7 billion, an increase of $7.3 billion, or 34 percent over last year. This appropriation has the largest increase by far of all the procurement appropriations, and is continued as the largest of all procurement appropriations. The new budget provides for procurement of 271 aircraft, an increase from the 241 funded in the current year. A total of $5.6 billion is included for procurement of 34 B-1 aircraft, and an additional $1.5 billion is included for B-1 advance procurement.

Initial procurement funding is included in fiscal year 1985 for tactical fighter derivative aircraft which will be modified F-15's or F-16's. Initial funding is also provided for 10 T-46A next generation trainer aircraft, 3 C-20A special air mission aircraft, and 2 range control aircraft. Other aircraft funded include 48 F-15 aircraft, 150 F-16 aircraft, 8 KC-10 tanker aircraft, 2 MC-130 special mission aircraft, 10 C-5B cargo aircraft, and 4 TR-1/U-2 aircraft. the aircraft modification program increases by 22 percent to $3.4 billion. Major programs in this category include the B-52, F/RF-4, C-5, C-130, C-135, E-3, and the Civil Reserve Air Fleet (CRAF). The aircraft spares budget shows a 29-percent increase to $6 billion.

The Air force missile procurement budget is $9.8 billion, an increase of $2 billion, or 26 percent over last year. The budget includes $2.9 billion for 40 MX missiles which accounts for the largest portion of the increase. the budget proposes to initiate Air Force procurement of the Harpoon missile and includes initial procurement funding for the new medium range air-to-air missile. Also, the budget includes 120 ground launched cruise missiles, 4,500 Maverick missiles, 871 HARM missiles, and 156 Stinger missiles. Modification of missiles increases by 25 percent to $162.3 million while missile spares and repair parts increase by 90 percent to $639.8 million. Other support programs increase by 16 percent to $4 billion. This category includes a number of space programs. The budget proposes initial funding of $83 million for the space defense system.

The other procurement, Air Force budget is $9.6 billion, an increase of $2.6 billion, or 38 percent over last year. The munitions and associated equipment budget increases by 57 percent to $1.4 billion. The budget for vehicular equipment increases by 36 percent to $441.6 million. Electronics and telecommunications equipment increases by 55 percent to $2.7 billion, and other base maintenance and support equipment increases by 22 percent to $5 billion.

DEFENSE AGENCIES

Defense agencies procurement, which represents about 1 percent of the total DOD procurement budget, totals $1.2 billion in the fiscal year 1985 budget. This is an increase of $300 million, or 32 percent over the fiscal year 1984 level. Funding of procurement items for OSD, Defense Nuclear Agency, Defense communications Agency, Defense Logistics Agency, Defense Intelligence Agency, and other intelligence and related agencies are included in this appropriation.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT PURCHASES

The budget includes an appropriation request of $25 million for Defense Production Act purchases. A fiscal year 1984 request of $200 million for this program was denied authorization.

RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, TEST, AND EVALUATION

The fiscal year 1985 budget request for RDT&E of $34 billion is $7.3 billion more than was provided for this purpose in fiscal year 1984. This is a 27-percent increase over last year. In constant dollars, the 1985 RDT&E budget shows a 22-percent real growth over the 1984 appropriation, when the administration's projected defense inflation rate of 4.9 percent is considered within the overall RDT&E program, the budget request for basic research and advanced development is up 45 percent in constant dollars over last year, strategic programs are up 6 percent, tactical programs are up 28 percent, intelligence and communications are up 19 percent, and program support is up 13 percent.

The budget includes a total of $1.53 billion for new DOD efforts on ballistic missile defense (BMD). These "Star Wars" efforts, called potentially feasible by the Department, have been assigned to the Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency. These efforts are now carried in the advanced development category, rather than in the strategic category as in former years, thus accounting in part for the growth figures for those categories stated in the preceding paragraph.

In strategic programs, ICBM modernization, which includes MX and Midgetman, is budgeted $2.4 billion. The Air Force has also requested $508 million for continued development of the B-1 bomber. The Navy budgeted $2.1 billion for the Trident II missile system, and projects that $2.3 billion will be required in fiscal year 1986 for that program.

Major Army tactical programs being continued include antitactical missile—$92 million—remotely piloted vehicles—$103 million—and Division Defense Command and Control—$129 million. The Navy budget request includes continuation of such tactical programs as JVX—$198 million—DDG-51—$125 million—and advanced light weight torpedo—$147 million. Air Force tactical programs being continued include C-17—$147 million—advanced medium range air-to-air missile—$218 million—and precision location strike system—$83 million.

New starts requested for fiscal year 1985 include the Army's advanced antitank weapon—$25 million—the Navy's wide aperature array—$15 million, and the Air Force's advanced air-to-surface missile—$54 million.

As in previous years, the Air Force is budgeted to receive the largest portion of DOD's RDT&E funds. This year, the relative shares are: Air Force, 42 percent; Navy, 29 percent; Army, 15 percent; and Defense agencies, 14 percent.

INTELLIGENCE AND COMMUNICATIONS

The budget request for intelligence, tactical intelligence and related activities, and communications contains significant increases for a number of programs and subprograms, many of which are a continuation of initiatives started in recent years. The budget request in these areas, while proposing some new programs, appears to reflect acceptance by the Department of Defense and the need of moderate the initiation of new programs in order to adequately fund existing programs.

In the area of communications, command and control, significant increases are requested for a number of satellite programs, including the following:

MILSTAR satellite program	+$180,000,000
NAVSTAR GPS	+100,000,000
Defense Satellite Communication System (DSCS)	+200,000,000

I hope the Defense Department does not again attempt to fund a rapid deployment force in Jordan in this budget which I have opposed. If it is still the administration's desire to fund this force, it should be done in the open, and it should be considered by the Foreign Operations Appropriations Subcommittee and not included in a Defense appropriations bill.●

PRIVATE LEGISLATION FOR THE RELIEF OF ALBERT W. STRAHORN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. PANETTA) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce private legislation for the relief of Mr. Albert W. Strahorn who has been denied his rightful claim to naval retirement.

In 1929 Albert Strahorn graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy and entered service in the U.S. Navy. Early in 1930, the Department of the Navy issued a directive offering young officers who had not yet completed the statutory minimum years of naval service, the opportunity to resign from the Navy and be recommissioned in the Naval Reserve. This directive sought to make vacancies available for the commissioning of upcoming U.S. Naval Academy graduates without exceeding the quota of officers allowed in the service as established by Congress. In a letter from the Naval Bureau of Navigation, then Ensign Strahorn was told he would be "given the date of preference" which he held in the Navy as long as he enlisted in the Naval Reserve within 4 months. In accordance with the Navy's directive, Albert Strahorn resigned from the Navy on June 1, 1930 and was recommissioned in the Naval Reserve in active status on October 8, 1930.

After some 23 years of service in the Naval Reserve, including active service during World War II, Lieutenant Strahorn retired from the Naval Reserve. Mr. Strahorn retired in 1953 after being informed by the Bureau of Personnel that he was qualified for retirement as a result of "over minimum service." Unfortunately, Mr. Strahorn did not receive a complete record of his retirement credits from the Bureau of Naval Personnel until 1962. At that time Mr. Strahorn learned that the Navy had not credited him with military service during the period in which he transferred from the Navy to the Naval Reserve under the special 1930 directive, contrary to the "date of precedent" promise made to then Ensign Strahorn.

As a result, Mr. Strahorn was declared to be 3 months short of the required 20 years of military service to qualify for Navy retirement. Since this time, Mr. Strahorn has petitioned twice to the Board for Correction of Naval Records and both times was rejected. Mr. Speaker, this body has traditionally offered citizens, after all avenues of administrative recourse have been exhausted, a final means of resolving claims with the U.S. Government. I believe this body has a responsibility to live up to the commitments made to those who have stood by this Nation during wartime and who have served in our Nation's Armed Forces.

Accordingly, I am introducing private legislation declaring the period in question as military service, thereby making Mr. Strahorn eligible for his long-awaited retirement pay.

The following is the text of my bill:

H.R. 4751

A bill for the relief of Albert W. Strahorn

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purpose of determining the entitlement of Albert W. Strahorn, United States Naval Reserve, Retired, ([redacted] xxx-xx-xxxx [redacted]) of Carmel, California, to retired pay under chapter 67 of title 10, United States Code, and for the purpose of computing any retired pay which becomes payable on the basis of such entitlement, Albert W. Strahorn shall be considered to have been a member of the Naval Reserve for the period beginning on June 1, 1930, and ending on October 7, 1930.

SEC. 2. (a) Any retired pay which becomes payable by reason of the first section of this Act shall be computed as though Albert W. Strahorn had become entitled to retired pay under chapter 67 of title 10, United States Code, effective on December 15, 1965.

(b) Any amounts of retired pay which become payable by reason of this Act for any months which occur before the date of the enactment of this Act shall be paid in a lump sum by the Secretary of the Navy to Albert W. Strahorn.●

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATION NEEDED TO PROVIDE FAMINE RELIEF TO AFRICA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. MITCHELL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleagues in strenuous support of an immediate supplemental appropriation to relieve the rampant famine which prevails in Africa. Currently, the most severely stricken area—the Sahel—contains some 120 million people who are in desperate need of food assistance. We cannot ignore the urgency of this situation.

It is imperative that we realize the potential devastation and significant loss of lives if indeed we do not move quickly to provide the United States share of the approximate 3 million tons of needed food. We must also recognize the threat of basic infrastructural breakdowns which could be precipitated by the prevailing drought and the dire need for agriculture assistance.

I would submit to my colleagues that such a bleak picture should never be the sole determinant for the action which many of us urge today. Rather, this country should consistently evaluate continuing needs in Africa and other countries, and remain steadfast in our pledge to provide needed assistance.

We are faced with the fact that our own pledges of food assistance to Africa have fallen far below historical levels. In fact, such assistance has fallen to under 25 percent of immediate African need. This is appalling, and I would urge that this House move expeditiously in the passage of a supplemental appropriation to address this matter.●

GREEK INDEPENDENCE DAY: A NATIONAL DAY OF CELEBRATION OF GREEK AND AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. NEAL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced today a resolution which would designate March 25, 1984, and each March 25 thereafter, "Greek Independence Day: A National Day of Celebration of Greek and American Democracy."

I have done so, Mr. Speaker, with full knowledge that such a resolution is highly unusual, if not unique. It is not common for the Congress to officially recognize for celebration a historical event that is not peculiarly American.

That notwithstanding, I believe that our common experience with democracy has forged a bond between the Greek and American peoples; and that it is both worthy and appropriate that we join in the celebration of Greek Independence.

More than 2,000 years ago, the ancient Greeks flourished under a democratic form of government in which the supreme power to govern was vested in the people. In setting up our representative democracy, the Founding Fathers drew heavily upon the experience of the ancient Greeks; and while there are many differences between modern American and ancient Greek democracy, the underlying principles are strikingly similar.

The high value we place upon individual freedoms and equal justice—and our constitutional precept of trial by jury—can be traced, for example, to the ancient Greeks. Aside from law, of course, our lives as people and as a nation are touched daily by the influence of Greek philosophy, art, architecture, medicine, and language.

Greek Independence Day commemorates the beginning, in 1821, of an uprising against the Ottoman Turks, which had ruled Greece in a despotic way for some 400 years. The Greek Revolution, coming about 50 years after our own struggle for independence, was enspirited by the American Revolution. It lasted 8 years, until finally—with the help of Russia, France, and England—the Ottoman yoke was thrown off. In forming a new democratic government, the founders of modern Greece looked again to the American experience. Thus it may be said that bread cast upon the waters in ancient days came home to Hellene.

Mr. Speaker, it is fitting, I believe, that we join with the people of Greece in celebrating one of mankind's greatest achievements—the capacity, given the chance, to govern itself. It is an opportunity that both we and the people of Greece share gratefully, a stewardship we accept gladly, and a right we guard passionately. Let us, then, celebrate it together.

The resolution follows:

H.J. RES. 468

Joint resolution designating March 25, 1984, and every March 25 thereafter, as "Greek Independence Day: A National Day of Celebration of Greek and American Democracy"

Whereas the ancient Greeks developed the concept of democracy, in which the supreme power to govern was vested in the people; and

Whereas the founding fathers of the United States of America drew heavily upon the political and philosophical experience of ancient Greece in forming our representative democracy; and

Whereas March 25, 1984, marks the 183rd anniversary of the beginning of the revolution which freed the Greek people from the Ottoman Empire; and

Whereas the founders of modern Greece, in their turn, looked to the American experience in forming their new government; and

Whereas these and other ideals have forged a close bond between our two nations and their peoples; and

Whereas it is proper and desirable to celebrate with the Greek people, and to reaffirm the democratic principles from which our two great nations sprang; Now therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That March 25, 1984, and each March 25 thereafter, is designated "Greek Independence Day: A National Day of Celebration of Greek and American Democracy," and that the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe the designated day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.●

EXTENSION OF THE MORTGAGE REVENUE BOND PROGRAM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill today to reauthorize the mortgage revenue bond program; a program which was has made housing affordable for millions of Americans. Though over three-fourths of the Members of the House and Senate cosponsored legislation like this during the first congressional session, the program was allowed to expire on December 31, 1983, when the House failed to act on H.R. 4170, the Tax Reform Act, into which it had been incorporated.

Mortgage revenue bonds have been an invaluable source of financing for the housing industry, with particular impact during the recent period of high interest rates. When buyers were priced out of the market by high financing costs, bonds were an important source of housing capital. In 1982, for example, more than one-third of all first-time home buyers in this country received financing through the use of mortgage revenue bonds. And in 1983, roughly 220,000 families bought homes with capital generated through the sale of revenue bonds.

My State of Washington only recently created a housing finance agency. Until the formation of this agency, Washington home buyers were unable to take advantage of the benefits of the mortgage revenue bond program. Now, when this funding mechanism is finally available to Washington citizens, authority to issue the bonds has been allowed to expire.

As the National Conference of State Legislatures emphasized in testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee:

Mortgage revenue bonds constitute a valuable use of State and local credit. Moreover, mortgage revenue bonds represent a program where volume is controlled and where losses to the Federal Treasury are limited.

Indeed, housing has long been a primary stimulant of economic activity and an industry which helps lead the Nation out of recession. Mortgage revenue bonds are one of the tools which help housing fulfill that pivotal role.

Because of the importance of mortgage revenue bonds to the housing construction industry and to America's home buyers, I hope the Congress will act quickly to reauthorize the program. I am submitting legislation today to reemphasize the vital nature of these bonds, and to restate my interest in seeing the program approved at the earliest date possible. I urge the chairman and members of the Committee on Ways and Means to make the extension of this authority a high priority during the first weeks of this session.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MACKAY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. MACKAY. Mr. Speaker, earlier today I was unable to be present on the House floor to cast my vote on final passage of H.R. 1904, to extend the Child Abuse Prevention and Adoption Reform Act.

Had I been able to be present, I would have voted "yes" on H.R. 1904.

I appreciate having this opportunity to state my position for the RECORD.●

KICKING THE HOMELESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ) is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, in a statement January 31, the day before yesterday, the President offered the opinion that there are vast numbers of homeless people who are homeless by choice. That is very much like saying that the hungry are that way because they are hungry by choice, that the mentally ill are happy being mentally ill, or that the cold find joy in shivering. Blaming the victim does not cure the problem. It never has, and it never will.

The White House claims that there is a study that shows as many as one-fourth of the homeless have refused help. That does not prove that even those unfortunates enjoy their condition. All it proves is that they are so ill that they cannot understand the difference between an offer of assistance and a threat to their well being. Indeed, in hearings on homelessness in the Subcommittee on Housing, which I have the honor of chairing, which we held December 15, 1982, the last week of the lame duck session, the record shows that many of the young, chronically mentally ill "often reject offers of ongoing outpatient treatment or hospitalization." That is a direct quote from the hearings and the proceedings that we held that week in 1982.

But this did not mean these people were the happy bums that the President portrays; it simply means that, again, from the testimony, and I quote: "Traditional treatment methods do not work with this subgroup, this particular small subgroup." Many people who are young, male, and chronically sick end up on the streets. Apparently this subgroup is the one that the President cited as being people who could get along fine if they just wanted to. But there is not a shred of evidence that shows the mentally ill can just wish their illness away, any more than the sores and dirt of street life can be simply wished away. No; it takes real care and real baths to get rid of the sores and dirt, and it takes real care to deal with the illness that plagues so many of the homeless.

The homeless are not by any measure, not by any stretch of the imagination, happy vagabonds. In a followup hearing on homelessness held here in Washington last week on Wednesday, the Housing Subcommittee found that the problem is greater than ever. The homeless are not living in shelters because they like it or because that is what they want; they simply have no other choice. Some of them of course are not insane, some of them may be sick, but our testimony included the remark that if some of the street people did not get help soon, they might really become mentally ill. And the homeless themselves reaffirmed the 1982 testimony: They are anything but happy with their situation. Many of them tragically come from perfectly ordinary normal backgrounds, and have simply just run out of luck. Many of them want help, but there is no way that they can get into the care system simply because they have no address, or do not know where to go, or cannot find an agency that can or will meet their needs.

Let us suppose that Ronald Reagan became a street person tonight. How would he go about finding a job? It would be hard, because he would not have a phone to answer if some employer happened to call in response to an application. He would not have an address to receive mail from any prospective employer. He would probably not have any references to offer. He would have a difficult time even getting to a prospective interview, because there would be no money. He would have difficulty in making himself presentable, because the homeless do not enjoy a bath every day, and there is no place to keep a set of clean clothes if you live on the street. That is the reality of homelessness: Not with the best will in the world is it possible to lift yourself into the mainstream of life, alone and unaided, broke and a stranger, unskilled and friendless.

It is easy for the comfortable to kick the poor, and that is what Mr. Reagan did. But if he had gone out and moved among them, as I did, and as some of my colleagues did, he would see a different world. He would see that even in the case of mental illness it is certainly not fun; he would see that living on the street is not easy; he would see that those who are on the streets are there because they have no choice, or have no idea of who or what they are, and no way of getting help. Or even if Mr. Reagan were to go into a church basement two blocks from his present residence, he would find homeless people, desperate for help, and looking for just a little solace. They are not there because they want to be. They are not there because they enjoy the handouts. They have no choice, and they have no other place to go.

The homeless are by and large those with the least skills. They have the least to offer any prospective employer. Some may be ill. Some may be mentally disturbed. But in no case do they have the resources of friends and families, nor even access to the pitiful welfare system such as it is. Neither can they get adequate mental health care. They are trapped, prisoners of their own weaknesses, and bound to their helplessness by the bonds of our own indifference. It is incredible that in the face of all reality and in absolute ignorance of all evidence, the leader of the free world could so callously dismiss the needs and wants of the most helpless people among us—those modern-day lepers, the street people.

Witness after witness, both in 1982 and just last week, told the Subcommittee on Housing how strained community resources are by the vast and growing numbers of the homeless. Witness after witness detailed what communities are tying to do, what dedicated volunteers are trying to do, and how overwhelmed they are. The sad and brutal fact is that the number of homeless people is growing, and no one can say either how big that population is or how vast it might yet become.

The problems of the homeless will not be solved by kicking them. These people are already down and out. What they need is a helping hand. They need housing, they need treatment, they need training. That is what would enable them to start making some choices in their lives. As it is today, they have no choices; they either live on the streets or they live not at all.

Mr. President, you do not have to go to Calcutta. Americans are dying on the streets right now. Truthfully, the street people have been abandoned. They have no family, nor friends, and there is no agency, public or private, that meets their most basic needs. The best they can get is a little emergency shelter, an occasional meal, and ever so rarely, a little real compassion, a little real help. But their numbers are so great, their needs so overwhelming, that there is no reasonable or responsible course but to try and establish programs that can provide the help that is essential. Sending the homeless to the jails only multiplies their problems; returning them to mental institutions is neither workable nor economical, let alone effective. The homeless need help, but there is no system to provide that help. They need compassion, but the President appears to offer them less than he would a cringing dog.

Yesterday, a number of my colleagues joined me in an invitation to the President to get to know something about the realities of street people and shelters for the homeless. We invited him to visit with us the biggest shelter for the homeless in this country—the same shelter where we conducted our hearing last week—three blocks from the Capitol, and within easy sight of a favorite waterringhole of the rich and powerful, a hotel that Mr. Reagan likes to visit on political occasions. Maybe just maybe, one night he would pass up the glitter and go see the grime. Maybe he would then learn something about what street people must face every hour of every day. Maybe then he would see how little power the homeless have over their lives, much less power or influence over the powers that be.

It solves no problem to blame the victims. The homeless are, of all the victims in this world, least responsible for their plight, least able to alter their circumstances, least able to find their way. It is a shame, an indictment of our own indifference that they are ignored, and a greater shame yet that our President, Mr. Reagan chooses to spit on them, rather than offer even a glimmer of interest or compassion.

Mr. Speaker, I offer for the RECORD at this point a letter to Mr. Reagan signed by myself and 11 of my colleagues, and a copy of the newspaper article to which I referred earlier.

The letter and article follow:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, SUBCOMMITTEE ON HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT, COMMITTEE ON BANKING, FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, D.C., February 1, 1984.

Hon. RONALD REAGAN,
The President, The White House, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: It is tragic that you believe the thousands of homeless individuals and families who are huddled on the streets of our cities, housed in temporary shelters or lined up to receive food are living that way because they choose to do so. In the vast majority of cases, nothing could be further from the truth.

Last week, the Housing and Community Development Subcommittee held a nine-hour hearing in a shelter for 500 homeless people that is operated by the Center for Creative Non-Violence (CCNV) in Washington, D.C.—only two miles from your doorstep. Thirty-seven witnesses—representing the Governors' Conference; the Conference of Mayors; and voluntary service providers from Boston, Phoenix, New Orleans, San Francisco, Chicago, New York, Birmingham, Detroit, Orange County, California, Baltimore, and Washington, D.C.; the Salvation Army; church volunteers; and individual homeless people—provided clear and uncontroverted testimony that the homeless are not suffering by choice and that local community resources are stretched to the breaking point in trying to address the need. the homeless need jobs, training, affordable housing, medical and sometimes psychiatric assistance—not an assertion that the problem does not exist.

In this, the wealthiest nation in the world, it is an indictment of our social policies that we have not taken care of our most vulnerable and desperate citizens. We call upon you, the elected leader of this nation, to join us, the elected representatives of the homeless, as well as the well-housed, citizens of this nation, in solving this problem.

As a beginning, we urge you to support the appropriation of $60 million authorized by Public Law 98-181, which would be used by communities and nonprofit organizations to provide shelters and supportive services in communities that have the greatest need to care for their homeless residents.

In addition, immediate efforts should be undertaken to provide desperately needed psychiatric care for deinstitutionalized mental patients who are incapable of working and caring for themselves without federal financial help.

Finally, Mr. President, we invite you to return with us to the shelter operated by the CCNV, to meet the dedicated volunteers and the guests who are sheltered there. The General Services Administration has permitted the building to be used as a shelter until March 31, 1984, when the building will be offered for sale. Given the desperate need for housing, we urge you to direct the G.S.A. to make the building available until all of the 500 people sheltered there each night find permanent, affordable and safe housing alternatives.

Sincerely,

Henry B. Gonzalez, Chairman, Bruce F. Vento, Mary Rose Oakar, Parren J. Mitchell, Barney Frank, Marcy Kaptur, William J. Coyne, Charles Schumer, Jerry M. Patterson, Mike Lowry, Sander M. Levin, Jim Cooper.

HOMELESS CHOOSE TO BE, REAGAN SAYS

(By Jaun Williams)

CHICAGO, Jan. 31.—President Reagan, responding in a television interview and a political speech to charges that his administration has favored the rich over the poor, and said today that people sleeping on outdoor grates in cities are homeless "by choice."

Asked on ABC's "Good Morning, America" in an interview from the White House why "people across this country . . . say, 'Yes he is the nicest man and we like him but his policies are causing misery,'" Reagan responded that his administration is spending more on programs for the needy, health care and food stamps.

"What we have found in this country, and maybe we're more aware of it now," Reagan added, "is one problem that we've had, even in the best of times, and that is the people who are sleeping on the grates, the homeless who are homeless, you might say, by choice."

White House spokesman Anson Franklin said later that some studies show that as much as 25 percent of the homeless refuse help from government agencies. Reagan added in the television interview that the problem has been "aggravated" by new laws requiring some mental institutions to release disturbed persons when "they have no place to go".

Later today, in a speech here at a convention of concrete, gravel and stone producers, Reagan charged that political opponents who say his policies favor the rich are trying to appeal to "greed and envy."

"As the political rhetoric heats up," he said, "there will be those trying to appeal to greed and envy—make no mistake that that is what they are trying to do—who suggest our tax program favors the rich. This is the same anti-business, anti-success attitude that brought this country to the brink of economic disaster."

"The finger-pointers and hand-wringers of today were the policy makers of yesterday," Reagan said, "and they gave us economic stagnation and double-digit inflation. There was only one thing fair about their policies: they didn't discriminate, they made everyone miserable."

The estimated $30,000 to $35,000 cost of the presidential trip here was paid by the government rather than the Reagan-Bush '84 campaign. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said White House and campaign lawyers made a judgment that the trip was not political because "he doesn't have any 'reelect me' in the speech" and that it is "no different from speeches we've been making for three years." Ed Rollins, the Reagan-Bush campaign director, told the Cable News Network in an interview that the trip is "official business. It's not a partisan campaign trip . . . he's not asking anyone to vote for him. He's going on totally about his programs that have . . . worked."

In the "Good Morning, America" interview, Reagan branded the charge that he favors the rich as an "absolute falsehood." He contended that President Kennedy proposed tax cuts that offered more benefits for the rich than his do. In his speech here to 4,000 members of the International Concrete and Aggregates Industries, Reagan drew a sharp contrast between his critics' complaints about economic policies that favor the rich and their "distasteful" attitude toward the profit motive.

"I for one have no trouble with the profit motive," he said. "When people are free to work for themselves, they work longer and harder . . . it hasn't been perfect and our country has made mistakes but with freedom and the profit motive we have achieved greatness as a nation." Reagan said he rejected the proposition that supporting government programs for the poor is a form of charity. He said charity is a reflection of what an individual chooses to do with his or her money and not what one group feels the government should do with everyone's money.

The president said working people can see the beneficial results of his economic program in the rising rate of real wages and the record number of people now employed. He did not mention the 8.2 percent unemployment rate and said that, despite lower inflation and interest rates, much remains to be done.

"Turning the economy around was priority No. 1," he said. "Now we can turn to the equally difficult task of streamlining government, making it more efficient and responsive."

Among the unfinished work Reagan listed was the $180 billion budget deficit. But he got the most applause of the day when he told the convention that he will not raise taxes to reduce the deficit.

TOM CLARK: AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN

(Mr. PRICE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, during the recent congressional recess, the Nation lost an outstanding citizen and a true American gentleman. On December 7, 1983, Mr. Thomas Raymond Clark died.

I am sure many in this Chamber have benefited throughout the years from the consultation and advice of Mr. Tom Clark. Tom, as an executive of the General Electric Co., served his country with honor and heroism as a sailor during World War II. He then joined the General Electric Co., where he served with distinction until he retired in 1982. The last 20 years of his illustrious career, he spent as the manager of GE operations in Washington, D.C., with responsibility for energy-generation matters. Prior to his service in Washington, Tom built up an outstanding reputation in the service of his company and the Nation in frontier fields such as the development of nuclear power for military and civilian uses and in the production of special nuclear material for the defense and security of our Nation.

Tom had an outstanding understanding of the critical importance of energy to the security and welfare of our Nation. All of us owe him a debt of gratitude for educating us on this matter. We have not as yet attained the goal he advocated which was the attainment of independence of foreign sources for our basic energy supplies but he did accomplish much in pointing out the road. Although with the loss of his counsel and guidance it will be more difficult to reach our objective, we can, in the honor of his memory, work harder toward the goal of energy independence which he so strongly advocated.

Tom, in addition to his many official responsibilities found time to devote to many civic and social functions. He was a member of the board of directors of Americans for Energy Independence which spent so much time in the education of the public concerning energy production and conservation. He also found time to devote efforts to the support of the theatrical arts. He had a great interest in music and was an accomplished musician.

We all will miss Tom's counsel and friendship. Although our loss will be great with the passing of such an outstanding American gentleman, I am sure the grief of his outstanding family will be even greater. I want to extend to his most gracious and devoted wife, Jane Mitchell Clark, and to his beautiful and devoted daughter, Sally Mitchell Clark, my sincerest sympathy on their great loss. May God bless you and keep you both.

I would like to include two excellent public statements made in memoriam of Tom's death. One is a resolution passed by the board of directors of the American Nuclear Energy Council in memory of Tom. The other is an article written by Llewellyn King, the publisher of the Energy Daily. I commend both of these statements to my colleagues since they reflect, from my own knowledge, a number of outstanding characteristics of this great American, Tom Clark.

RESOLUTION IN MEMORY OF TOM CLARK

Whereas, Tom Clark worked diligently and tirelessly through the years for the General Electric Company; and

Whereas, his service to his company in turn benefited the U.S. commercial nuclear industry; and

Whereas, in a long and productive career as an industry executive, he played an instrumental role in the development of commercial nuclear power, thereby serving the Nation; and

Whereas, for many years he served as an advisor to Members and staff of the Congress and officials of the United States government who were responsible for our Nation's energy policies; and

Whereas, he was recognized by industry and government as a creative and conscientious contributor in matters of national energy policy; and

Whereas, he was a good friend and was loved, honored and respected by all who had the good fortune to know him; now, therefore be it

Resolved, That the Board of Directors of the American Nuclear Energy Council, extends its heartfelt grief at his passing to his wife Jane and daughter Sally.

TOM CLARK, AN AMERICAN GENTLEMAN

(By Llewellyn King)

My first meeting with Thomas Clark, the revered former General Electric lobbyist who died in Cincinnati last week, was not an auspicious one. He was upset by an article I had written in the trade paper Nucleonics Week and planned, as he said, to straighten out the young whippersnapper. He asked me to meet him at the University Club and we settled down in the men's grill to do battle. Half way through he said, "I think I like you" And so we gave up our discussion and had probably more gins than were good for us and a rattling good time.

Tom was an institution in Washington: a lobbyist of the old school who won the admiration of lawmakers and administration figures by his charm, his graciousness, and a patrician quality nearly unique in a political city. Tom was a gentleman and he exuded it through his dignified handsomeness. What is more, he was an American gentleman, not a clone of the European or an imitation Englishman. He bought his clothes at Brooks Brothers, drove a top-of-the-line American car and devoted most of his working life to the General Electric Company.

He once explained to me that General Electric had been good to him and he felt the need to return the favor. It is more likely that he simply didn't know how to behave otherwise. It was not in his soul to jump jobs or to engage in company politics. He worked for the company in Cincinnati, in Hanford, before becoming General Electric's Washington nuclear lobbyist. An engineeer by training, Tom loved the Washington assignment but always reserved a special affection for Cincinnati. He said it had the finest people in America. He relished being a lobbyist, although high-powered operators today, like those at the Gray Company, might not recognize his courteous and informed practice of the craft.

"The purpose of being in Washington is to ingratiate yourself, but that won't do you any good if you don't know something," I recall him telling me. Tom's lobbying was based on knowledge; a profound knowledge of his subject and a consuming knowledge of history.

When the late Olin Teague, powerful chairman of the House Science Committee was ill in Bethesda Naval Hospital, he asked Tom out to see him because he was worried about nuclear proliferation. It was a time when a 16-year-old boy was getting national attention by claiming that he could make a nuclear weapon in his garage. "Was it true?" asked Teague. Tom unscrewed a lightbulb from a bedside lamp and held it up: "Do you think he could make this in his garage?" asked Tom. Teague was reassured.

At least six people who headed either the Atomic Energy Commission or the Energy Research and Development Administration told me at various times that they thought Tom was simply the best lobbyist in town because he didn't threaten or cajole or make deals and he was a source of good, reliable information.

He was not to be found batting down the halls of Congress too often. No. The central part of his day was the Tom Clark lunch at Le Provencal. These lunches were almost to Washington what the Algonquin roundtable was to New York in the 1930s. I used to marvel at the speed with which new members of Congress, just appointed Cabinet Secretaries or assistant secretaries, or new members of the Atomic Energy Commission, would be swept up by Tom's hospitality. In Washington a lot of people want to get to know the new players quickly; journalists do, lawyers do, politicians do, and lobbyists do. Tom always beat us to it. Hardly had a name been sent to Congress than Tom would have him at lunch.

He was able to do it because he was a decent man with honorable wares to sell.

Unhappily, with the Carter Administration, with its paranoia about business lunches, some of the magic went. The boys at the table were more often men who had lost some of their former glory and who hankered for the way things were. Carter people were out jogging at noon and eating sprout sandwiches. It was the beginning of the end of the Washington lunch as a high art form and the master of the form was Tom Clark.

Last year Tom retired and not long after he suffered a debilitating stroke from which he never recovered. His wife Jane and his daughter Sally moved him back to Cincinnati where he had been so happy.

What made Tom work was that he delivered for his employers, for the politicians and administrators who sought his help, and abundantly for his friends. He was not the first subscriber to this publication because the messenger with his order and check got lost. But he had meant to be.●

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

REPORT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

REPORT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

SENATE—Thursday, February 2, 1984

(Legislative day of Monday, January 30, 1984)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

Almighty God, Sovereign Lord of all, Thy word declares, ". . . there is no authority except from God, and those that exist have been instituted by God."—Romans 13: 1.

Grant that Thy servants remember that they are here by divine appointment and accountable to Thee in their work.

Give them Thy wisdom as they wrestle with complex issues—clarity in debate—courage of conviction as they vote. Keep them from compromise which sacrifices principle. Lead them to justice and compassionate decisions. May Thy grace guide their deliberations and Thy blessing crown their efforts.

In the name of Him Who is the light of the world. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there are special orders this morning in favor of three Senators, which will consume about 45 minutes, and 20 minutes of leadership time. That will get us a little past 11, plus whatever time we use in quorum calls and other permitted activity.

I hope that we may be able to do something on the pending business and the pending question. But Senators will remember that there has been an order entered that the Senate will recess from 12 noon until 2 p.m. in order to accommodate the requirement of Senators to attend functions away from the floor of the Senate within the Capitol or the Capitol area.

Mr. President, I hope we can finish this bill today. I still do not know whether we are going to have a compromise worked out on the Metzenbaum-Bumpers proposals or whether we are going to have a vote up or down or whether we are going to have a tabling motion. I do not wish to sound preemptory, but we are going to have something, and we are going to do it at about 2:30 or thereabouts, because we have to get on with the matter at hand.

As I indicated last night, I think overnight we have been permitted to explore the possibility of compromise. I hope it works out. But if it does not work out, it will be the intention of the leadership on this side to ask for a vote on these measures. If Members are not agreeable to a vote on the merits then it would be the intention of the leadership on this side, if we cannot get an agreement on a time to vote within reasonable boundaries, then to make a tabling motion at some point today.

Mr. President, we also have the other bills that are referred to as ancillary to this bill. We will take them up today or tomorrow depending on what we do with the package itself.

We will not be in on Saturday. We set aside most of next week to finish this sequence. We are a little behind schedule but we can still do it. So I urge Senators to consider that we need to get on with the business at hand.

Mr. President, I ask that I may reserve the balance of my time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader is recognized.

EXPORT ADMINISTRATION ACT

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on Monday of this week, the distinguished majority leader raised the prospect that we may deal with the Export Administration Act sometime next week or in the very near future, I believe. We had hoped to take up that legislation at the end of the last session, but there were some Senators who had problems with the bill and the Senate agreed to an extension of existing law on the last day of the session.

At the time we passed that extension, we were under Presidential emergency authority because the old statute had expired. That situation created potential problems for American exporters and gave rise to legal uncertainties. I am pleased that we were able to agree to a temporary extension, and I said so at the time.

But that extension will expire at the end of February and I am concerned that, if we do not act soon on S. 979, we could find ourselves faced with the same problems again today.

I know that the AFL-CIO and many of its affiliate unions, the Emergency Committee for American Trade, many U.S. corporations, as well as other interested groups are urging prompt consideration of this important bill to improve export licensing and controls. Senator GARN and Senator PROXMIRE are most interested, I believe, in fulfilling this responsibility to bring the bill forward. And I believe they are prepared to do so.

The House completed its bill last October. I understand that there are some substantive differences between the House and Senate versions and the conference could be long and difficult.

I know that the majority leader wants to bring this legislation before the Senate. He has made that clear. I would like to ask him if he can elaborate on his earlier statement and give us some definite indication, in view of the approaching time deadline, as to when we might expect the bill to be taken up in the Senate.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader. I share with him the concern for action on the Export Administration Act, and I agree with him that the Banking Committee, Senators GARN and PROXMIRE, have indicated their readiness to go forward with this matter at this time.

The minority leader will recall that we tried to get that up yesterday in order to take up some of the slack in time that we were not using in trying to address the crime package, but we were not able to do that then. I am going to continue to try to do that because we do need to get it up and any slack period I find I may, after first consulting with the minority leader, attempt to get that up again.

But, in any event, it is the intention of the leadership on this side to try to have the Export Administration Act up and acted on before the end of next week. So the minority leader and other Senators can be assured that I am aware of the urgency of the situation and that I share his concern and that we will persist in the effort to get it up.

I might also say that there are some problems still on the matter that concern some Senators, and I have arranged a meeting in my office today to try to iron those things out. But in any event, we are going to take it up, if the Senate will permit the leadership to do so, and to do that before the end of next week.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader for his very positive statement and I feel reassured by it. I am confident that those on the outside, some of which groups I have alluded to, will also be grateful. As far as I am concerned, the majority leader will have all the cooperation that I can give him in helping him to bring this matter up.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BYRD. I yield the remainder of my time to the majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I have no immediate need for additional time and I thank the minority leader most generously for his action.

Mr. President, could I require of the minority leader if he has any further need for his time?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I do not have any further need.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I yield back the time remaining.

Mr. President, the first special order is in favor of the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN). I do not see Senator BENTSEN in the Chamber at this moment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, would the majority leader ask unanimous consent that the time allocated to Senator BENTSEN be transferred to the control of Senator KENNEDY, and that Senators wishing to utilize that time may be recognized in whatever order they may wish?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I would be happy to. Do I understand that all three orders are to be transferred to Senator KENNEDY?

Mr. BYRD. Just the time allocated to Senator BENTSEN.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time allocated to Senator BENTSEN be transferred to the control of Senator KENNEDY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that Senators who have special orders may be recognized in any order convenient to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order to suggest the absence of a quorum without the time being charged to the three Senators having special orders.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I wish to express my appreciation and that of my colleagues for the arrangements that have been made by the majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum under the condition previously stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR BUMPERS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

THE PRESENCE OF AMERICAN MARINES IN LEBANON

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise this morning to make a few comments about the presence of American marines in Lebanon and what that portends for the Middle East and our foreign policy, and whether or not this is wise and what kind of price we are likely to pay for the benefits received.

First, Mr. President, I wish to exculpate myself from the decision to send marines there in the first place. I am reading from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 21, 1982, and I am quoting a speech I made on the floor of the Senate that day when I said:

> Mr. President, I just want to go on record this morning as expressing my sincere and deep concern about the President's commitment, or apparent commitment, to send American troops back into Beirut.
> When the decision was made to send troops to Beirut the first time—

Incidentally, that was just a month before, on August 25—

> there were several of us who met with Secretary of State Shultz, who told us that the President had decided to send 800 marines into Beirut along with French and Italian forces. I was the only person there who expressed some reservation about it at that time. I did not object strenuously, though I thought it was a mistake.

Today, I think it is a grave mistake.

Mr. President, I am not going to belabor the record with the rest of the speech that was already in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on September 21, 1982, well over a year ago, but will state that my position has not changed and, so far as I am concerned, my position has been fully vindicated. The United States is not preceived by anybody in the Middle East to be a peacekeeper. We are not ferreting out terrorists, we are not actually engaged in any kind of fighting on the side of the Lebanese forces of Amin Gemayel.

What is the definition of a peacekeeper? It is one who keeps the peace. And what are the American marines doing there? Guarding a civilian airport. Are they standing tall as the President said in his state of the Union address? Is America standing tall? Well, the marines in Beirut are being asked to carry out a function that violates ever single precept of the U.S. Marines.

I do not mind boasting that I was a marine for 3 years I know what the Marines teach. I know what they believe. To ask them to guard a civilian airport in carrying out not a military mission but a diplomatic mission, to ask them to do that from 15 feet underground violates, in the most flagrant way, every tradition of the U.S. Marine Corps.

So, Mr. President, the debate in this country is ongoing and it is reaching a crescendo. The President cannot much longer avoid grave responsibility for a misguided foreign policy.

There are those who say the Democrats make much of this and that the Democrats would beat the President over the head this fall in the elections if we "cut and run." Here is one Senator who will happily stand on the steps of the Senate wing of the Capitol and praise the President to high heaven if he makes a very courageous and statesmanlike decision to withdraw the American marines from Lebanon.

Yesterday, the President of Lebanon, Amin Gemayel, said that if the American marines withdraw, the Soviets will take over all of Lebanon. No. 1, I do not believe that; second, I find that threat offensive. How many times did we hear that from 1963 until 1975?

Well, the Communists did take over in Vietnam and the Chinese, who financed a large share of the war for Vietnam, are now the mortal enemy of Vietnam and vice versa.

So were we a big loser? We were a terrible loser and this country now suffers from that war and will continue for the next several decades to suffer from that war. But not because we lost the war and not because the Communists took it over. We shall suffer because we should never have been there in the first place. It was a misguided foreign policy and everybody recognizes it in hindsight.

So, why in the name of all that is good and holy, do we never seem to learn from our experiences and from history?

Tell Walid Jumblatt, the leader of the Druze, that the United States is trying to help that area resolve its difficulties in a very fair and equitable manner between the Christians and the Moslems, and he will laugh you out of town.

Last week, the Washington Post reported that there are "no negotiations going on at this time."

And it was not 2 weeks before that an agreement had been reached, so we were told, to resolve that conflict. And no more had that been uttered by the President of the United States and carried by the media until Walid Jumblatt said, "You must be out of your mind. We are not about to accept this agreement." And so the war proceeds apace, and this morning Walid Jumblatt says he sees absolutely no possibility of reconciling irreconcilable differences between the Druze and the Maronite Christians.

Does that sound like a Communist war? A war between democracy and communism? It is not. It is a religious war, pure and simple. You cannot separate the players in Lebanon without a score card. You have the Syrians, you have the PLO, you have the anti-PLO, you have the Druze, you have the Maronites, you have the Israelis and the Americans and the French and the British and the Italians.

So what are we accomplishing? So far we have lost 260 men and the Commandant of the Marine Corps, Gen. Paul Kelley has said privately and publicly and before Senate committees that if this Government continues to insist that the Marine Corps carry out the mission as it is presently designed, then, please prepare to receive more pine boxes in Dover, Del.

Now, when the Commandant of the Marine Corps is telling you that he does not like the mission, that it is an impossible mission, and that more and more of the cream of the crop of the U.S. Marine Corps are going to die, for no discernible purpose, how do you justify the policy?

You talk about Mideast oil. Mideast oil is almost 1,000 miles away from the area.

We debated the War Powers Resolution last year. I really found the President's action almost contemptible, and I do not take issue with the President lightly. When I was Governor, I felt that everybody in the legislature felt he ought to be in my seat, and sometimes I rather resented it. I recognize the awesome responsibilities of the President and he does need our help, he needs our cooperation, and he ought to get it in a bipartisan way when he is right. But I note that there are a lot of people in this body, both of the President's party and the opposition party, who are increasingly taking issue with our policy in Lebanon because they cannot see any light at the end of the tunnel. But the President, in what I will not call contemptible but I thought was a violation of the law, sent American marines to Beirut and then refused to trigger the War Powers Act which had been passed in 1973 over Presidential veto, passed overwhelmingly over a Presidential veto, in fact. And many constitutional scholars in the United States said this was a constitutional act on the part of the Congress. It was nothing more or less than to say we are not going to fight any more undeclared wars like Vietnam.

But the President refused to abide by that law. And as things began to get hotter and hotter, finally we went to one of these study commissions and everybody goes to the White House and works out this deal, and they came back and they say, "Well, Congress can trigger the War Powers Act."

Indeed, Senator Javits, the great towering intellectual who served in this body for so many years with distinction, said during that debate that Congress could trigger the War Powers Act if the President refused to. That was legislative history. And so they finally agreed to send a resolution to the Congress which said the President may leave the marines there for 18 months, but that was not all the resolution said. It said he can leave them there for 18 months or until there is a stable government in Lebanon and until all foreign forces have been withdrawn.

When you look at those provisions, you realize that we threw the ball right into Syria's court, because if Syria decides not ever to withdraw, we have no choice but to either push them out or stay as long as they do. When you put two virtually impossible chores into a war powers resolution, both of which put our future into the hands of other people, that is just plain dumb.

Well, I can tell you, and I say happily and with some exhilaration, that I voted against that war powers resolution. The Senator from Georgia, Senator NUNN, made the point, I think more cogently than anybody, that either you had to take out the 18 months or you had to take out the two conditions under which we would withdraw. Otherwise the resolution was fatally flawed, because if you are going to stay until all foreign forces are gone and Lebanon has a stable government, it should be for 18 years, not 18 months, because neither of those things are likely to happen in 18 months.

The point has also been made, and I think it is true in most cases, that Congress ought not to dictate the conduct of war, once you are in a war. If Abraham Lincoln had not been a very strong President and removed General McClellan because he would not fight, we would probably be meeting in Richmond today instead of in Washington. But the President was a strong President; he removed the General, and he conducted that war oftentimes over the objection of Congress, and that is fine because he is the Commander in Chief under the Constitution.

But in this case we are not waging a war. We are in a war zone. We are in a war zone where we are losing men just as certainly as if we were engaging in hostilities against any country, and we are going to continue to lose men.

Well, I thought we made a grave mistake in passing that war powers resolution, and I am very happy to say that a number of people here who voted for that war powers resolution now say they are wrong and they want to have another crack at it.

Mr. President, I keep repeating on the floor of the Senate that old adage about those who do not understand history are doomed to repeat it. That is what we are doing. When will Lebanon be stable? The Maronite Christians are a minority in Lebanon. The Constitution of Lebanon says that the Christians are the majority and therefore shall dominate Parliament. At the time the Constitution was agreed to, they were in fact a majority, but they are not now; the Moslems are in the majority. Unless Gemayel is willing to share power and give up some power, the Moslems are not going to negotiate and Lebanon is never going to be stable. Therefore, we are going to stay 18 months and leave then with nothing being accomplished except the deaths of more marines.

Well, let me close by issuing a personal plea and a promise to the President. No. 1, please at the earliest possible time go to the United Nations and ask them to send a U.N. peacekeeping force in there to replace us. And short of that, remove American marines from Lebanon just as expeditiously as possible.

I was criticized one day because I said people ought not to vote on where American troops are going to die for our national security unless they stop and ponder especially, if they have sons, are they willing for their sons to die in that situation and for that cause? That is putting it on a very personal level, but Senator BIDEN, from Delaware, said he ran for the Senate because he was tired of the old men of this Senate deciding where young men like him were going to die.

Our Lebanon policy is a wrongheaded policy. History says that it is doomed to failure. Experience of every kind says it is doomed to failure. So why not cut our losses now, save lives, change our policy? I promise you that nothing much is going to change in Lebanon.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR LEAHY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPECTER). The Senator from Vermont is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

THE PRESENCE OF AMERICAN MARINES IN LEBANON

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Arkansas has spoken clearly, cogently, and with some passion on this issue.

I think it is good that we are hearing it debated, because I recall the situation last fall. Last fall, we were told that we were finally going to have a classic example of why the war Powers Act was passed after Vietnam.

I recall well when I came to the U.S. Senate nearly 10 years ago. It was in January 1975; the Vietnam war was winding down. In April of that year, we voted in the Armed Services Committee, by a one-vote margin, to cut off further authorizations for the war in Vietnam. That effectively ended it. Within 6 months after that time, the last Americans were home.

Of course, events took place in Vietnam that probably, in all likelihood, would have taken place even had we not spent 55,000 American lives and hundreds of thousands of Vietnamese lives and enormous fortunes and a great deal of our political capital. Events occurred that would have occurred anyway.

However, the interesting thing is that, in the Congress of the United States, it became harder and harder to find anybody who had ever voted for money for Vietnam.

You have to wonder how that war kept going. Congress passed the War Powers Act to make sure this would never happen again, and finally Congress would have a handle so that it could stand up, do its sworn duty, be statesmanlike, show foresight, and stop anything like this from happening again. We did not get ourselves into major international conflicts or entanglements from the time of the War Powers Act to now, so Congress never had to speak up. If anybody ever asked how we got into Vietnam, a Member of Congress could say, "We have the War Powers Act. That sort of thing is never going to happen again."

So what happened the very first time we have a chance to test the War Power Act? Both bodies of Congress cut and ran, cut and ran.

We passed a resolution, carefully crafted, not to bring peace in Lebanon, not to bring our American Marines home, not to protect the safety of the American boys who are over there dying, not to preserve the honor and integrity of the United States, not to maintain our status as a superpower, but to do only one thing: to make sure this question got beyond us and will not come up again until after both the congressional and Presidential elections of this year.

Profile in courage, Mr. President? It is a profile in timidity. Both Democrats and Republicans were willing to put this issue beyond them, so that they would not have to face it, so that they would not have to actually stand up and be counted. Let the events go on, let the marines die, let our honor be besmirched, let the situation in Lebanon continue to be as bad as always. But at least we will not have to face up to it until after the election.

Unless, of course, we go home on a couple of weeks' recess and find the people are saying, "Maybe you should do something about it." We will be statesmen and say, "We should do something about it."

What will we do? Some of us will have the best of all possible worlds for a politician: We can say: "Yes, the Marines ought to get out. But unfortunately, some Members of Congress, put the decision off beyond next year's elections. But maybe we ought to do something about it."

Is that not the same kind of thing that got us and kept us in Vietnam? Is that not the same kind of thing that makes a mockery of the War Powers Act?

If we want to repeal the War Powers Act, we should bring it up and repeal it. At least, it would be honest. The American people would know what we have done. We would have said, Congress gives this responsibility for peace or war entirely over to the executive branch of Government. Congress, the elected representatives of the people, will have no part in foreign policy whatsoever. But at least we will be honest about it.

Then we can go on and debate ad infinitum whose pork barrel project will take precedence this week; how we will roll back our salaries by a couple of thousand dollars or whatever the amount was; whether we will refurbish our offices or not—all those "major" things. But we sure will not get into foreign policy, where the honor of our country is committed, and where our soldiers and marines may die.

Mr. President, tragically, this week the 259th young American died in the Lebanon conflict. The administration gives us no reason to hope that the grim toll will end.

The worst thing about it is when we sit here and try to explain why we did not have the courage to stand up and exercise the War Powers Act. As we try to do that, more Americans will surely die.

It was a terrible mistake to have intervened militarily in the age-old Lebanese religious and factional struggle. One need not be an expert on the Middle East to know the Lebanese civil war is a bottomless morass. It was gross arrogance by the administration to think a token force of marines could affect the course of that struggle simply by landing and running up the Stars and Stripes.

The marines were put in a position where they were sitting ducks; the sentries on duty were not even allowed to have bullets in their weapons. Can you imagine the reaction had a previous President sent marines in with no clear purpose, put them in a barrack where they were a perfect target for one of the classic terrorist mechanisms in Lebanon, the truck bomb, told the sentries they would have to have unarmed weapons, that they would not have the proper security around it? If a previous President had done that, can you not imagine the cries of the weakness of this country?

But now we say no, we will just stay the course, it is a new beginning. Somehow we will bring peace.

When the marines were sent back to Lebanon after covering the PLO evacuation in late 1982, their mission was supposed to be short and carefully limited.

They were to help keep the peace. And do you know what else they were supposed to do? Project a calming presence among the factions fighting for power. A calming presence—is this an ad for some kind of an over-the-counter tranquilizer, or is this a discussion of foreign policy? In either case it makes no sense.

But, as the administration became more committed to the minority Christian government of Amin Gemayel, the role of the marine contingent has drastically changed. Supported by naval gunfire and aircraft, it has given direct military support to the forces of the Gemayel government against other factions. The marines have become a participant in the civil war, and what is worse, on the side of a minority which cannot defeat its opponents, or to negotiate a peaceful settlement.

The administration says that its objectives in Lebanon now are the restoration of the sovereignty of the Gemayel government over the entire territory of Lebanon, and the withdrawal of all foreign forces.

You only have to read the newspapers to know how little success the Gemayel government is having in its talks with the other factions.

President Gemayel was reported in the press as predicting chaos in Lebanon if the marines withdraw, and an expansion of Soviet and Syrian power. Those are the words of a man who knows how dependent he is for survival on the military support of the United States and who wants to scare us into staying.

I was about 20 years younger, Mr. President, when I heard similar statements coming out of Southeast Asia.

I have no doubt that one reason is because the minority Christian group led by President Gemayel does not want to give up any of its privileged political position under the Lebanese constitution to the Moslem and Druze communities.

Why is the Gemayel government following a hard line in the talks? I think it is because it believes it has the military, diplomatic, and political backing of the United States. As long as the Gemayel government believes the United States will protect it, why should it make major concessions to promote national reconciliation?

The second objective, withdrawal of foreign forces, means, in plain English, withdrawal of the Syrian forces. Israel has already made clear it will not pull out completely until Syria does. Syria says it will not withdraw until the May 17 agreement between Israel and the Gemayel government is scrapped and a new withdrawal agreement negotiated which treats Syria differently than Israel. So, the administration's real objective is forcing the withdrawal of Syria.

Mr. President, on the one hand, 1,800 beleaguered marines are far too few to compel Syria to withdraw. On the other hand, it is out of the question to put in enough American military power to push Syria out. The administration knows the American people will not support U.S. involvement in a Middle East war. This is an unfair position in which to place our men, and it is making this country look weak, confused and uncertain, the exact posture a superpower can never allow itself to get into.

Does any one of us want to see the United States look that way?

Our only effective means for getting Syria to leave is through prolonged diplomacy and pressure on the factions to negotiate a national reconciliation in Lebanon that reduces their need for Syrian support.

So, as I have done repeatedly on the floor of the Senate, I ask the President the central question: What purpose are the marines serving in Lebanon? The unavoidable conclusion I come to is that they are a target, doing little more than defend themselves against the constant attacks of one or another of the parties in the Lebanese civil war.

Is this really a posture into which we want to put the bravest and best fighting men this country has? Is that really fair to them or to their families? I think not.

Mr. President, before concluding, I want to touch on another argument we are now hearing from the administration and its supporters for not withdrawing. The claim is that "cutting and running," as they call it, would seriously damage American prestige and credibility around the world.

It has not said about how much prestige and credibility is being damaged by staying. Again, it is an argument that calls to mind the arguments and memories of Vietnam.

This is the most infuriating argument of all. Having made a gross blunder by committing American forces in the first place, the administration now tries to justify hanging on by saying it is a test of American credibility. They even dredge up the time-tested excuse to cover foreign policy mistakes, an excuse made by both Democratic and Republican administrations in the past. If we do not stay in spite of every commonsense argument, the Nation's real interests and the wishes of the American people, the Russians will, of course, come in.

Mr. President, it is time to start getting our men out of a no-win, sure-lose situation. I urge President Reagan to listen and act before the casualty list gets longer.

Mr. President, I yield whatever time I have remaining to the Senator from Massachusetts who I understand has time on his own right.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Senator from Vermont.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR KENNEDY

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 15½ minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Thank you very much.

LEBANON

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, yesterday, certain Members of the House of Representatives called on President Reagan to begin a prompt and orderly withdrawal of the Marines from Beirut. In reply, the President said, "I'm not going to pay any attention to it."

Yesterday, certain Members of the House of Representatives expressed concern about the increased dangers to U.S. forces in Lebanon. In reply, the White House accused the Democrats of playing politics with a critical foreign policy issue.

Today, I urge Congress to send a message to the President. "We will not be ignored, and we will no longer be partners in your folly in Lebanon. Mr. Reagan, if you will not bring back the Marines, we will." Let us look at the facts.

First, the multinational force is under frequent attack. The casualties continue to mount. The October attack on our Marines was a terrorist Pearl Harbor. And this past Monday, the 263d serviceman gave up his life. In retaliation, we kill civilians.

Second, U.S. forces in Beirut are no longer perceived as peacekeepers but as participants in Lebanon's violent factional conflict.

Third, the Marines are no longer a presence: They are now only a target. They spend their time trying to keep alive rather than trying to keep the peace. They perform no military function today.

As a matter of fact, in the Armed Services Committee yesterday with Secretary Weinberger and General Vessey, General Vessey was asked particularly about what is the combat role of the U.S. Marines, and he said: "Virtually, there is none. Their presence is only psychological."

I daresay that the civilians who are involved in our mission over in Lebanon are a good deal safer than the U.S. Marines.

Fourth, since the Marines went into Lebanon in September 1982, the situation has changed—in the words of the Long Commission—"To the extent that not one of the conditions upon which the mission statement was premised is still valid." There is no way today that the United States can keep the peace in Lebanon with 1,600 Marines.

For those who really wonder about the role of the U.S. Marines in Lebanon, I urge them to read what I consider to be an outstanding report, the McNichols report of the House of Representatives. It reviews the history and documents and supports the statement that I have just read that is part of the Long Commission.

Fifth, our military role has expanded. Last September, we bombarded the mountains overlooking Beirut. This was to support the Lebanese Army. Last December we sent in fighter bombers and more naval gunfire to retaliate against the Syrians for shooting down a U.S. reconnaissance plane. As the Long Commission reported, our decisions in Lebanon have emphasized military options and the expansion of the U.S. military role despite the fact that the security of our forces has deteriorated and progress toward a diplomatic solution has slowed.

And finally, the September ceasefire has collapsed and negotiations are at an impasse. We have no reason to think that a peaceful settlement of the civil war in Lebanon is possible either next month or next year.

The administration cannot present a persuasive rationale for keeping the Marines in Beirut. We are never told why the Marines are in Beirut: Instead we are always told why they cannot leave.

Current law permits the President to continue U.S. military involvement in Lebanon without further permission from Congress until Apirl 1985. That blank check undermines the historic purpose of the War Powers Act. It violates the spirit of our constitutional and statutory responsibilities on the most important issue ever to face a Congress—the question of war and peace.

The War Powers Resolution states that its purpose is to fulfill the intent of the framers of the Constitution * * * and insure that the collective judgment of both the Congress and the President will apply to the introduction of U.S. Armed Forces into hostilities or into situations where imminent involvement in hostilities is clearly indicated by circumstances.

By its vote last September, however, the Congress excused itself from further participation in policy on Lebanon. We told the President, "Take the New Jersey and take 1,600 Marines and do what you want in Lebanon. Do not call us until after the 1984 election."

That was a mistake, and I urge Congress to change course.

Last November, I joined with Senators EAGLETON, DIXON, and PELL to introduce a resolution that would shorten the authorization period for our military presence. This resolution would restore Congress to its proper role. We believe that Congress should insist on frequent, periodic review of our policy in Lebanon. Our Marines are in hostilities, and Congress should participate in the decision on whether the Marines should stay or whether they should return. This resolution remains the pending business of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

I will support any effort in Congress that promises to bring back the U.S. Marines from Lebanon. That mission is not worth the life of one more American serviceman.

My fellow critics of the President's policy fear that they will be accused of losing Lebanon. I think we should stop talking about nations as if they were trophies to be won or lost as if in a football game or a tennis tournment. Lebanon was never ours to win, and it is not ours to lose. Lebanon belongs to the Lebanese, and the destiny of Lebanon must be determined by the Lebanese. Lebanon must make peace with itself, and only then will it be possible to think of a lasting peace in the region.

I urge you to read the testimony of former Secretary of Defense James Schlesinger before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Secretary Schlesinger stated:

> A continuation of the existing cat and mouse game might well enhance Syrian prestige even more than an American withdrawal—and increase Syrian influence over the moderate Arab States. A continuation of the present stalemate, subsequent to the Israeli withdrawal, may increasingly make the United States a lightning rod for Arab nationalism, displacing the Israelis in this role. Finally, the continuing turbulence in Lebanon both contributes substantially to the Shiite awakening outside of Iran and helps to focus Shiite resentment against the United States.

American forces must be withdrawn from Beirut and they must be withdrawn immediately. This does not represent a retreat from our basic objectives in the Middle East. Our naval presence provides ample military might to preserve our real interests in the region. Vigorous American diplomacy combined with a strong economic and military assistance program will demonstrate our continued commitment. Removal of our ground forces is a simple recognition that those forces no longer have a purpose there. And as the last marine departs, I would advise our adversaries to shift their gaze offshore to the Mediterranean where the battleship New Jersey still floats.

I congratulate the Members of the House of Representatives—particularly Speaker O'NEILL, Chairman FASCELL, and Representative HAMILTON—for the action they took yesterday. I urge my colleagues in the Senate to do likewise. There is no more time to spare.

Mr. President, I reserve the balance of my time and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATHIAS). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time is yielded back.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time now remaining before the hour of 11:30 a.m. be devoted to the transaction of routine morning business in which Senators may speak for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

S. 2241—BILL TO CLARIFY THE OBLIGATIONS OF BROADCASTERS TO LEGALLY QUALIFIED CANDIDATES FOR PUBLIC OFFICE, FEBRUARY 2, 1984

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my distinguished colleague from Alabama, Senator DENTON, and others, in introducing legislation to clarify the obligations of broadcasters under the Communications Act of 1934 with respect to candidates for public office.

This measure, referred to as the "Broadcasters' Protection Act," would close a dangerous loophole which exists in the present law. As we are all aware, legally qualified candidates for public office have very broad discretion in regard to the form and content of campaign statements. Under present law, such a candidate may include in his or her campaign broadcasts an unlimited array of subjects.

Mr. President, the lack of limitations on broadcast content has heretofore not been a source of any significant problems. However, the recent case involving a publisher of a pornographic magazine demonstrates the need for this legislative action. No one ever intended or anticipated that political campaigns would be a vehicle for bringing into our homes the kind of pornographic trash which this "candidate" promised to broadcast.

Under existing law, a broadcaster carrying campaign material for a legally qualified candidate must provide equal opportunity, with no right of censorship, to other qualified candidates. Consequently, such a broadcaster must choose between violating the "equal access" provision, or violating Federal laws and regulations designed to control obscenity.

Mr. President, the Broadcasters' Protection Act will clarify a broadcaster's responsibility by permitting a broadcaster to refuse to air material which is reasonably believed to be in violation of Federal criminal law. The bill also provides for immediate review in the district court by either the broadcaster or the candidate.

Mr. President, I strongly endorse the principles of this bill, and I would urge my colleagues in the Senate to give it their support.

FOR THE PAST 15 YEARS THE UNITED STATES HAS FOLLOWED A NUCLEAR "BUILD DOWN"—RESULT: BUILD UP

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, immediately following the ABC showing of the television movie on nuclear war, "The Day After," Secretary of State George Schultz said on the same television network, that our country had been following a policy of reducing our nuclear weapons for the past 15 years or more. Schultz argued that the country—including the 3 years of the Reagan administration—has not been building up its nuclear arsenal. On the contrary in the Schultz view the country has been pursuing a policy of unilateral peace through arms control more far reaching than the proposed nuclear freeze. It has actually reduced the number of nuclear weapons. A couple of days later Secretary of Defense Weinberger backed up Schultz with the assertion that the number of U.S. nuclear arms have declined since the 1960's by 25 percent. On December 27, Walter Pincus reported all this in the Washington Post. He then pointed out that the Schultz and Weinberger reports are true. But they overlook the most significant fact: That today's nuclear weapons stockpile though smaller and with less explosive yield could wreak far greater damage on the Soviet Union. How can this be? How can a smaller arsenal carry more destruction to the Soviet Union than a larger one? And especially how can an arsenal with less power deliver "vastly more damage" in Pincus' words, to the Soviet Union than the more powerful nuclear arsenal of the 1960's? The answer as Pincus points out is that many of the nuclear bombs of the 1960's would not have made it to their targets. Today our nuclear arsenal can be counted on to get through and dish out their death and destruction for sure. As Pincus says—they are "unstoppable." It is instructive to put the recently proposed "build down" program championed by three of our Senate colleagues and supported by the President in this context. "Build down" was hailed by the administration and its supporters as a novel approach to arms control that would more surely bring the arms race under control than the nuclear freeze. Why? Because build down would not simply stop future testing, production, and deployment as the freeze would, it would provide that any changes we make in our nuclear arsenal would reduce the size of that arsenal. "Build down" would provide further a more stable arsenal. In introducing less stable multiwarhead missiles such as the MX into the nuclear arsenal, there would be a reduction of three weapons for every one introduced. On others that provided more stability, the trade-off would be the retirement of two missiles for each new one. For the most stable new weapons, that is the single warhead missiles such as the new so-called midgetman, there would be an even one-for-one trade-off. How would this new "build down" policy differ from what we have been doing with our nuclear arsenal since 1967? In that year the Nuclear Weapons Data Book tells us the U.S. nuclear weapons stockpile contained 32,000 bombs, missile warheads, and shells. Today, 15 years later, there are 25,000 weapons in the stockpile. But the "build down" has been even sharper. In the early sixties the explosive yield of U.S. nuclear weapons was roughly 44,000 megatons. Today, it is 8,000 to 11,000. What has been going on here? Has the military that controls these nuclear arsenals followed a policy of quiet, unilateral disarmament? Do we have a cote of doves over in the Pentagon that has been deliberately reducing our nuclear military power administration after administration—including the Reagan administration? Of course not. In fact, precisely the opposite. Our military leaders have been doing exactly what the advocates of the so-called build down call on us to introduce as our "new" nuclear arms policy. They have been "modernizing" our nuclear arsenal. They have knocked out the "monster" bombs many of which could not make it to the target anyway. They have vastly improved the delivery system that will carry the nuclear bombs to their target through hundreds of tests. They are now assured that they have far greater accuracy, greater reliability, and the firm assurance that they can certainly take out more Russian cities and prime military targets than ever before. Some "build down." In fact, they have built up not "build down" the real, ultimate power of our nuclear arsenal. And this, of course, is what any nuclear policy supported and executed by the military is bound to do. What military officer would ever follow a policy of deliberately diminishing his effective military capability? Those military officers who have pushed for more and more weapons of all kinds support "build down." Why? Because for more than 15 years they have pursued this policy and succeeded in building an ever more deadly and devastating nuclear capability. If the two nuclear superpowers either unilaterally or by negotiations continue to pursue this policy, it will mean the arms race will go on. The nuclear weapons will grow more devastating on both sides. And the technology of nuclear destruction will race ahead out of control as we march like lemmings to the sea of our destruction.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the article to which I have referred by Walter Pincus from the December 27, 1983, Washington Post be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TODAY'S U.S. NUCLEAR ARMS STOCKS SMALLER BUT MORE EFFICIENT

CLAIMS OF REDUCTION ARE BASED ON RETIRING OUTMODED BOMBS

Top Reagan administration officials are pointing to reductions since the 1960s in the number and explosive power of the American nuclear stockpile in an effort to calm today's fears that the arms race is getting out of hand.

For example, after the showing of the television movie "The Day After," Secretary of State George P. Shultz said, "We work to reduce the number of these weapons" and "if you go back to the 1960s and compare the amount of destructive capability of our nuclear arsenal now as compared with then . . . it's about 70 percent less."

Two days later, Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger told reporters that the stockpile numbers had declined by 25 percent from the 1960s.

What these officials have ignored, however, is that those 1960s reductions were based on a secret stockpile filled with thousands of nuclear bombs that by today's standards would be considered far too big for efficient military use.

And what they also neglect to mention is that today's stockpile, although smaller in both number and explosive yield, is made up primarily of missile warheads, which could cause vastly more damage to the Soviet Union. Although there were many more bombs two decades ago, not as many were expected to make it to their targets. In contrast, today's missiles are considered unstoppable.

In addition, one bomb with enormous megatonnage, such as the 1960s B41, can be used to destroy only one major city, while one missile with several warheads can hit more than one target. For example, today's planned MX intercontinental ballistic missile, with less than one-sixth the total megatonnage of a B41 bomb, can destroy up to five times as many target areas with its 10 individually aimed warheads.

The official numbers are classified, but sources estimate that in the early 1960s the U.S. nuclear stockpile explosive yield was roughly 4,000 megatons. According to the recently published Nuclear Weapons Databook, in 1967 the stockpile contained 32,000 bombs, missile warheads, mines and shells.

Today there are roughly 25,000 weapons in the stockpile with a total yield of about 2,000 megatons.

In the 1950s and early 1960s, many U.S. strategic bombers carried the B41 bomb, which at over 20 megatons would produce the equivalent destructive power of 400 Hiroshima bombs, according to knowledgeable officials.

The giant size of the U.S. weapon was classified, and the public was led to believe that the Pentagon did not have an interest in an explosive of giant size.

In October, 1961, when the Soviets exploded large nuclear devices first at 25 megatons and later at 50 megatons, the Pentagon declared that weapons of that size "would be a mass killer of people." The statement added that the United States "considered this matter carefully several years ago and concluded that such weapons would not provide an essential capability."

In fact, however, at that time the Air Force was beginning to take its giant, 20-megaton bomb out of service and replace it with smaller ones that could hit more targets.

The B41 was an example of "overkill," as one scientist who worked on it said recently, and "the weapon that represented the massive retaliation policy of that time."

NEWS ANALYSIS

Massive retaliation, the Eisenhower administration policy of the 1950s that threatened complete destruction of the Soviet homeland if it attacked western Europe, brought on enormous expansion in the American nuclear stockpile and with it a bitter, long-running interservice battle over who would control nuclear weapons and how many of each type would be built.

However, beginning in 1961, with the advent of the Kennedy administration, the Air Force began to phase hundreds of their giant B41s out of service and replace them with smaller, 5- and 1-megaton bombs and intercontinental ballistic missiles whose warheads also delivered a far smaller nuclear explosion, one former general said.

The numbers of nuclear warheads and bombs began to go up in the early 1960s, as the total destructive power in megatonnage sharply dropped.

Though the total megatonnage of the American nuclear stockpile decreased as the monster weapons were retired, the newer weapons carried a far greater destructive threat to the Soviet Union because they could be delivered to, and thus destroy, many more cities and military target areas.

At a Senate Armed Services subcommittee hearing earlier this year Dr. Richard L. Wagner, assistant to the secretary of defense for atomic energy, described two charts, one of which showed what he called a "striking reduction" in "total megatonnage of U.S. nuclear weapons stockpile" from a 1959 high to its 1980 level.

Wagner accurately told the senators that the reductions developed because "during the early '60s we had a large number of bomber-carried weapons and we modernized the forces in the late '60s and '70s."

"We reduced the bomber component and increased the missile component," he said."

Those reductions of 20 years ago were not made as part of arms control negotiations. According to former officers and material in an article in the spring, 1983, issue of the Harvard-published International Affairs, the cuts had to do with Pentagon interservice rivalry and the realization of the potential damage the monster bombs could cause outside the target area.

During the 1950s and 1960s, according to the article, a secret debate went on inside the Pentagon over Stratetic Air Command plans for attacking the Soviet Union. Navy admirals and an adviser to President Eisenhower criticized as excessive the number of nuclear weapons SAC said it needed and planned to use on Soviet targets, according to documents obtained by the author of the article, Prof. David Alan Rosenberg of the University of Houston.

By 1960 the Navy, which was pushing forward with its Polaris nuclear missile-firing submarine, was in revolt against SAC's extensive control over retaliation strategy.

In a 1961 message to his superiors, Adm. Harry Felt, then commander of the Pacific Fleet, wrote that if the strategic nuclear attack plans of the Air Force, which he had just reviewed, were carried out his organization would have to be "more concerned about residual radiation damage resulting from our own weapons than from those of the enemy."

Another recently declassified Navy internal memorandum from that time estimates that carrying out SAC's alert provisions "and assuming only one weapon delivered to each [designated target], the fallout already exceeds JCS [Joint Chiefs of Staff] limits for points such as Helsinki, Berlin, Budapest, northern Japan and Seoul."

Eisenhower began to voice his concern that the building of nuclear weapons by the military had gotten out of hand.

In January, 1959, according to White House notes, Eisenhower was critical of military requests for nuclear weapons when he had to approve a new plutonium reactor at Hanford, Wash., according to the article.

"They [the military] are trying to get themselves into an incredible position of having enough to destroy every conceivable target all over the world, plus a three-fold reserve," he was quoted as saying.

In November, 1960, Eisenhower ordered his science advisor, George B. Kistiakowsky, who had worked on building the first atomic bomb, to go to SAC headquarters in Omaha and review the nation's nuclear strike plan.

Kistiakowsky reported, according to notes, that "damage criteria and the directives to the planners are such as to lead to unnecessary and undesirable overkill."

One immediate outcome, sources said, was the decision to retire the monster B41 bomb.

IN MEMORY OF MARTIN LUTHER KING: THE SENATE MUST MOVE TO RATIFY THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, last month the Nation celebrated the birthday of one of our Nation's greatest patriots and humanitarians, the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr., Congress has voted to honor this day as a national holiday, demonstrating the high esteem in which Americans hold Dr. King and the principles that he lived and died for. King's legacy, while specific to the plight of black Americans, retains a global resonance, giving substance and meaning to Abraham Lincoln's ringing description of the United States as "a Nation conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal."

King demonstrated his potential at an early age. At 15, he was a top-randed college student. Three years later, he was ordained a minister and elected assistant pastor of the Ebenezer Baptist Church. During this period he was devoted to reading and study, formulating his vision of a just and egalitarian Nation that would carry him to international reknown.

America is proud of Martin Luther King. Why? Because he represented, through word and deed, the ideals upon which this Nation was founded and because his influence was critical in the passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act and the 1965 Voting Rights Act, two landmark pieces of legislation affirming the rights of black Americans. We can be proud because, in the eyes of the whole world, King was deemed worthy of one of the highest accolades offered by the international community, the Nobel Peace Prize.

Yet a cloud hangs over this global tribute to Martin Luther King. Our Nation, despite its oft-stated commitment to human rights, despite its clear appreciation of the achievements of Reverend King, is guilty of a glaring inconsistency, an embarrassing example of hypocrisy. This cloud is our continuing refusal, over the last four decades, to ratify the Genocide Convention.

The Genocide Convention, first drafted in 1946, declares genocide and the serious mental or physical harm of an ethnic, racial or religious group, to be international punishable crimes. It is merely the written expression of a concept that has governed our international behavior since the Declaration of Independence, a value that all civilized peoples take for granted. Yet the United States has never signed. In fact, America remains the only industrialized country to have not ratified the treaty. Can we as a nation simultaneously honor the memory of Martin Luther King and ignore an international convention that upholds the very principles that King lived and died for? Can we afford to continue this tragic neglect when our credibility in the international arena is at stake?

I think not. I have spoken many times in this forum on the need to ratify the Genocide Convention. And I pledge to continue. Why? Because a commitment to human rights demands vigilance and consistency. Vigilance, because human rights abuses persist around the globe and it is our duty to point them out and bring international pressure to bear. Consistency, because sending a conflicting, ambiguous message to the world community undermines our well-deserved status as a nation firmly committed to the basic rights of all mankind. I urge may colleagues to stand by our globally recognized position on human rights, and, in memory of Martin Luther King, to move to ratify the Genocide Convention.

ORDER FOR RECESS FROM 11:30 A.M. UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is presently an order for the Senate to stand in recess at 12 noon until 2 p.m. It appears to me that it would better serve the requirements of Senators if we went ahead and did that at 11:30 a.m. I have not discussed that with the minority leader except in a general way. If he has any problem with it, I will change it.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that at 11:30 a.m. instead of 12 noon, the Senate stand in recess until 2 p.m. today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, we are still in morning business and do not have any takers. Unless somebody now seeks recognition, I am going to ask the Senate to stand in recess.

Mr. METZENBAUM. If the majority leader will be good enough to give me about 1 minute or so to make a short statement, I would appreciate it.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, at the conclusion of the statement by the Senator from Ohio, without any intervening business, the Chair place the Senate in recess until the hour of 2 p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Ohio.

COMPREHENSIVE CRIME CONTROL ACT

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, my short statement is made in behalf of myself and my cosponsors of this legislation. We had said yesterday, privately as well as publicly, that if there is some amendment that the intelligence agencies feel they need in order to exempt their activity from this amendment, we would certainly be very willing and anxious to note its contents and undoubtedly be prepared to accept it as an amendment to our amendment. We have said that in private meetings with representatives of the Department of Justice. We have told it to a number of Senators who have concern with respect to the intelligence communities involved. But just to make certain that there is no question about our position, we are willing, we are anxious, to have any spokesperson for the intelligence community or for the Department of Justice, the Attorney General, come forward with such language as they feel should be included in our amendment. I feel certain that they will have no difficulty in prevailing upon us to see to it that it is included.

I have taken the floor only for the purpose of being certain that this position, which was stated in the past—yesterday—is repeated today.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold that?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Certainly.

APPOINTMENT BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MATHIAS). The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, pursuant to 22 U.S.C. 276(h)-276(k), as amended, appoints the Senator from Kansas (Mrs. KASSEBAUM) to chair the Senate delegation to the Mexico-United States Interparliamentary Group during the 2d session of the 98th Congress.

RECESS UNTIL 2 P.M.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will stand in recess until the hour of 2 p.m. today.

Thereupon, the Senate, at 11:28 a.m., recessed until 2 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reconvened when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. COCHRAN).

COMPREHENSIVE CRIME CONTROL ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the pending business.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1762) entitled the "Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1983."

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 2690, AS MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the pending question is the Bumpers amendment to the Metzenbaum amendment, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I continue to hope we can find a way to resolve this issue without making a tabling motion. When the managers of the bill and the sponsors of the amendment arrive, I would like to confer with them. I do anticipate we will have some sort of a vote in the very near future. In the meantime, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Now, Mr. President, I see the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee is here. I will inquire if he is prepared to proceed, and I would timidly inquire if he has any prospect that we may get a vote on the amendment or something before long.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, we are here, and we are ready to proceed. If the distinguished Senator from Ohio wishes to push his amendment, I think it would be important for him to be here now to proceed.

Mr. BAKER. Very well.

Mr. President, at the moment, I once again suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, the more I study the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Ohio and the amendment by the distinguished Senator from Arkansas, the more I am convinced that these amendments should not be adopted.

I placed in the RECORD yesterday a letter from the Department of Justice, concerning this amendment. I discussed it some as I did so.

I now have another letter from the Department of Justice that I would like to present to the Senate. It reads as follows:

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: This is in response to your request for the views of the Department of Justice concerning yet another version of the wiretap amendment sponsored by Senator Metzenbaum. We have not had the opportunity to review the language of the latest draft but are informed that it would give the Attorney General unfettered power to except from the reach of the amended wiretap statute any federal officer or any federal activity which he determines, in his sole discretaion, should be excepted.

Let me reiterate that we view the Metzenbaum amendment as raising not only law enforcement and intelligence issues but other issues. Yesterday afternoon, for example, we noted that the General Services Administration regulations governing recording of wire communications contain an exception for handicapped federal employees who rely upon recording devices because of blindness or physical disability. There are indications from the U.S. Secret Service this morning that the amendment may interfere with the protective functions of the Secret Service. We are still in the process of attempting to determine how many other different types of exceptions would be required to avoid injustice or interference with vital governmental functions. This latest proposal by Senator Metzenbaum attempts to deal with the complexities and unknowns by making all such conduct a felony but then giving the Attorney General, as the official charged with enforcing the criminal law, the power to determine whether any, all or no such conduct will be punished.

We are unaware of any precedent for enactment of criminal legislation in which the Executive is delegated the power effectively to define the substantive conduct to be punished. Moreover, the new version of the amendment does not respond to our concerns expressed in my February 1 letter regarding the level of punishment issue.

In light of these considerations, we must emphatically reject this "exceptions" approach. We do so out of recognition of the immense complexity of the issue before the Senate and out of a deep respect for the separation of powers provided for in our Constitution and the role of Congress in determining whether any particular conduct shall be made criminal under the federal law. We note that both you as the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Chairman of the Intelligence Committee, Senator Goldwater, have expressed a willingness to hold hearings on the subject apparently sought to be addressed by the sponsor of this amendment. Full hearings and review are the responsible course of action. We urge the Senate to reject this wiretap amendment effort in favor of public hearings and informed, deliberate action. Our wiretap laws and the careful balance they create are far too important to be the subject of hastily conceived floor amendments.

Sincerely,

ROBERT A. MCCONNELL,
Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I also have a letter from the general counsel of the National Security Agency.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I wish to express, as General Counsel of the National Security Agency (NSA), my uncertainty concerning the effect Amendment 2689 might have upon certain of NSA's activities and by way of imposing possible criminal exposures upon NSA personnel engaged in certain activities, recognizing that the amendment is stated not to be intended to affect NSA activities in any respect, and, further, that the text of the amendment may have been changed from that discussed below. General concerns about the amendment including various policy considerations, have been, of course, expressed in a letter provided to you yesterday by the Department of Justice.

The uncertainty noted arises from the following matters:

(1) The amendment appears to be an enactment of general application, and its relation to more specific authorizing enactments, such as the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, is not clear.

(2) The general declaration of illegality in the first sentence refers to the "intercept" of a "wire or oral communication," although the title of the amendment refers to "tape-recording," and, further, expresses a requirement of all party consent to the act of "intercept." The word intercept typically is understood to refer to activity by other than an intended recipient of a communication and thus, by definition and by current statutory authorization, occurs without the consent of any party. The first sentence is thus inconsistent with the manner in which government agencies must conduct "intercept" activities.

(3) The general declaration of legality in the second sentence sets out two types of conditions establishing legality: first, inclusion within the three listed classes of individuals or categories of activity (law enforcement or intelligence officers; under their direction; in accordance with Attorney-General authorization and regulation), and, second, that the interceptor of the communication be a party or have the consent of one of the parties. Again, even if all NSA activities are considered included within the three listed classes, a requirement of consent or participation is inconsistent with the manner in which government agencies must conduct "intercept" activities.

(4) The third category listed—"Attorney General authorization in accordance with the regulations of the Attorney General"—is unclear as to whether one or two acts of the Attorney General are required and as to each intercept activity. If the condition is interpreted stringently, it is inconsistent with and could inhibit the conduct of certain activities. Further, it should be noted that the regulations referred to are not in existence and the conduct of certain activities pending their issuance could be questioned.

Finally, it should be noted that certain NSA activities conducted within the scope of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act reflect an extended, intensive Congressional review and balancing of intelligence, counterintelligence and other significant interests. It is not feasible in a short period of time to ensure that the provisions of Amendment 2689 would not act so as to unintentionally impair this balance.

Very truly yours,

JON T. ANDERSON,
General Counsel.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I wish now to present to the Senate certain points which I feel are very important on the Metzenbaum amendment.

First, this is a last-minute amendment involving complex issues and potential major impact on legitimate government activities, including foreign intelligence, counter-intelligence, and law inforcement.

Second, deficiencies of the original amendment were so readily apparent that the sponsors have had to repeatedly further amend the amendment.

Third, by amending their own amendment, the sponsors have established a parliamentary situation in which no further amendments are in order.

I believe the distinguished Senator from Ohio did say that they would consider consenting to certain amendments being offered if we came forth with them. Mr. President, that is not the question. No amendment is in order or will be in order unless the amendment is agreed to by the distinguished Senator from Ohio or the distinguished Senator from Arkansas. In other words, under the procedure now, we have no authority to offer an amendment if we wanted to offer one. We are foreclosed from offering an amendment that we may wish to offer which is unacceptable to the sponsor of the amendment.

Fourth, the amendment deals with governmental activities of the most sensitive type presently regulated under complex legislation which, in combination, took over 7 years of drafting effort (3 years for wiretap statute; 4 years for Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act).

Fifth, the amendment adopts a drafting style of a total ban on nonconsensual recording of wire and oral communications, thereby placing the burden on others to identify an unknown number of possibly critical and important exceptions. The burden should be on the sponsors of the amendment to identify the specific scope of the criminal offense they intend to create. In this light, the claim by the sponsor of this amendment that it is simple rather than complex is naive at best. Moreover, listing remotely adequate exceptions would require revealing of classified intelligence methods and operations.

Sixth, 5-year felony treatment for taping of a telephone conversation by a party solely to preserve the communication without the knowledge of other parties borders on the absurd.

Seventh, this means endless litigation. I quote from a Department of Justice letter:

First, the effort to provide an exception for consensual monitoring by undercover law enforcement and intelligence officers and informants appears so vague as to provoke endless litigation. At the very least, defense attorneys for drug traffickers, organized crime leaders and corrupt public officials will be able to raise questions concerning any investigation involving consensual monitoring due to vague concepts in the amendment, e.g., was the law enforcement official "acting under cover of law"; was the law enforcement officer "acting within the normal course of his or her employment"; was the informant "acting under color of law"; was that informant "performing a law enforcement function"; was the informant, at the time the recording occurred, "under the direction and control" of law enforcement officers, etc. Busy prosecutors and federal courts can be assured of expanded litigation in the years ahead given these new limitations on law enforcement activities.

Eighth, the amendment's exemptions for law enforcement and intelligence officers are too narrow. Such officers could intercept conversations only if party to the communication, if consent is given, or if the communication is a crime or tort. A telephone call made in furtherance of a crime, however, might not constitute a crime in and of itself: An officer intercepting a bomb threat could be subject to criminal liability. The amendment also makes no provision for the collection of positive intelligence or for gathering of information on terrorist activities abroad.

Ninth, the amendment does not define a foreign intelligence or counterintelligence officer. It is uncertain whether the double agents and informants would be considered officers.

Tenth, the amendment is so broad that it extends even to handicapped government workers who of necessity have their phone conversation recorded and transcribed. If passed, it would produce a myriad of such unintended consequences.

Mr. President, I again appeal to the distinguished Senators who propose this amendment to withdraw it and let us hold hearings. Senator LAXALT has consented to hold hearings on this subject. I have assured the proponents of the amendment that as soon as Senator LAXALT's subcommittee reports to the full committee there would be no undue delay there. I hope that a bill might be brought out that will be sound and one which we can all support. I think this matter is of interest to the public. It is certainly of interest to the National Security Agency and the CIA. It is of interest to the intelligence agencies. Senator GOLDWATER spoke yesterday about the dangers of this amendment. He is chairman of the Intelligence Committee of the Senate.

Mr. President, again I want to say that this amendment is opposed by the administration. It is opposed by the Justice Department. It is opposed by the National Security Agency. It is opposed by the Judiciary Committee.

Senator BIDEN, the ranking member of the Judiciary Committee, and I have worked on this criminal package for several years. We removed from it provisions on the death penalty, habeas corpus, the exclusionary rule, and the Federal Tort Claims Act, because those matters were controversial. We tried to take out of this package what we thought might raise controversial questions on the floor of the Senate. They will come up individually after this package has been completed. I am sure some of them will be opposed. But on this package we all agree. Therefore, we hope that no other amendments that might cause trouble later in the House, or elsewhere, or may bring a veto will jeopardize this package. We are anxious to get this package passed by the Senate and sent to the House. Then we will act on these other matters following completion of the package in the Senate.

Mr. President, I again appeal to these distinguished Senators to withdraw this amendment. Let us go ahead and pass the package. Again I assure them, on behalf of Senator LAXALT, hearings will be held on the amendment and the Judiciary Committee will act as soon as the subcommittee has acted. Then we can bring a bill to the Senate about which all the Government agencies have had a chance to testify, about which the public has had a chance to testify, and about which anybody with any special interest, including the distinguished Senators who sponsor these amendments, will have a chance to testify. We think that is reasonable. We hope the Senators will agree to that. I see both of them on the floor at this time. I am just wondering if they would care to respond.

● Mr. LAXALT. Mr. President, I must oppose this amendment. The drafting is too vague and overly broad, and the exemption for law enforcement and intelligence activities is too narrow.

If this amendment is adopted, law enforcement and intelligence officers could intercept conversations only if consent is given or if the communication constitutes a crime or tort. A telephone call where a crime is planned, however, might not constitute a crime within the meaning of the exemption. Certainly vital intelligence and law enforcement activities will be chilled. Moreover, this vagueness will encourage any criminal defense lawyer whose client was wiretapped to litigate and relitigate the legality of the officer's conduct.

The broad language of the amendment will produce a number of unintended and unforeseeable consequences. For example, a Federal employee who is sexually harassed by her employer should be allowed to record relevant conversations as evidence of her claim. If the Metzenbaum/Bumpers amendment is adopted, this employee's conduct would subject her to a 5-year penal sanction.

Some of these unintended consequences could be eliminated by careful, considered drafting. But simply amending the statute is not enough. Hearings are necessary to determine whether there are problems that we cannot foresee at this time.

Both the distinguished chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and I have offered to hold hearings on this proposal. My offer remains open. In the absence of hearings and thorough consideration of this measure, however, I cannot support this amendment and I urge my colleagues to join with me. We simply cannot tolerate the disastrous effects that this will have on our national security.●

Mr. BAKER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, while the distingushed chairman of the Judiciary Committee was making his presentation, I had the opportunity to briefly confer with the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Arkansas. I have no idea what might develop, but I think it is worth a little time to suggest that there might be an informal conversation between the parties. If they are willing to do that at this time, I am prepared to suggest the absence of a quorum so that the parties can get together and talk about it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2690—FURTHER MODIFICATION

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a modification of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

The amendment, as modified further, is as follows:

Amend amendment number 2689 by striking line 3 and all that follows and insert in lieu thereof:

Section 2511 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection.

"(g) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (c) and (d) of this subsection, it shall be unlawful for any person who is an official, elected official, appointed official, employee or agent of the United States, while acting in an official capacity, to intercept a wire or oral communication to which such person is a party, unless all parties to the communication have given prior consent to such interception or such person is—

"(i) an investigative, law enforcement, security, foreign intelligence or counterintelligence officer acting within the normal course of his or her employment;

"(ii) performing a law enforcement, security, foreign intelligence or counterintelligence function under the direction and control of an officer described in subparagraph (i); or

"(iii) acting in accordance with guidelines or regulations approved by the Attorney General.

Provided, however, That a person whose action would not have been unlawful but for this paragraph shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both. The amendment made by this subsection shall become effective six months after the date of enactment."

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, this modification is being offered at the suggestion of some members of the intelligence committee. Basically, it says three things. First, it shall be an offense to record a conversation by any party acting in an official capacity if he is a party to the conversation.

No. 2, it adds security to those who are exempt from the amendment, such as intelligence, foreign intelligence, and counter-intelligence. The word "security" is added.

No. 3, the effect of the amendment would be postponed for 6 months, which would give the Attorney General time to draft the guidelines.

Finally, it reduces the penalty from a maximum of 5 years in prison and a $10,000 fine to a maximum of 6 months in prison and a $1,000 fine.

Mr. President, I think the majority leader wants to vote on this at 3 o'clock. I have no intention of holding it up. My colleague from Ohio has a few words to say, and I yield the floor.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New York would like to be heard, and I yield to him.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. President, the new language has been offered as a substitute, as I understand. It is directly intended to address the problems which could arise in the original language with respect to the work of investigative, law enforcement, security, foreign intelligence, or counterintelligence officers acting within the normal course of their employment, and persons involved in law enforcement, security, foreign intelligence, and counterintelligence functions, under the direction and control of an officer of that kind.

In addition, there is a very broad exception—acting in accordance with guidelines or regulations approved by the Attorney General.

As vice chairman of the Select Committee on Intelligence, this seems to me to be satisfactory. It seems to me to be a very comprehensive statement, that this provision in no way is intended to affect, change, alter, inhibit, or diminish the legitimate intelligence activities of the U.S. Government which are now covered by a very comprehensive statute, the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act (FISA), which has unique provisions for authorizing intercepts of various kinds and involves a special panel of Federal judges. This has been in place for some time, and there has been no violation or misuse of this measure which has come to my attention.

The authority to conduct electronic surveillance under FISA and Executive order would in no way be affected by this amendment. Indeed, those activities are specifically excepted from the restrictions of title III by subsections (2)(e) and (2)(f) of section 2511, which selections would not be changed by the amendment.

I cannot speak for the intelligence community, but I can speak as a Member of this body who has been concerned for the interests of that community, whose resource we have considerably chanced in our intelligence authorizations, especially in the past 5 years. I see no way in which their work would be impaired or diminished or in any other way affected.

I offer the final thought that if this should prove to be the case, we can come to this body and make the necessary changes. This body has shown no disinclination to provide our intelligence and security agencies with the legal authority to do what they have to do, nor any disinclination to provide them with the resources or the men and women and moneys they need. In my judgment, we can proceed with some confidence that this will not in any way impair those activities; and if it should, we can be certain that we will hear of it and we can respond.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I am in a bit of a quandry here, and let me explain it briefly—not that I want anyone to share my dilemma with me, but to explain what I am about to do in terms of voting.

Yesterday, prior to the clarification that was made, I, as one of the members who works with Senator MOYNIHAN on the Intelligence Committee, shared a concern that was expressed by the National Security Agency and the Central Intelligence Agency in a letter sent to Senator THURMOND.

I note that in that letter they say—not that they are sure that this would in any way impede their effort or activity—but they say they express uncertainty, and that is the state that I was in as of yesterday on the merits of this, an uncertainty. And in the face of uncertainty, my view was that we should withhold from moving until that uncertainty was clarified one way or another and then move legislatively to correct it, and there will be other opportunities to do so.

I am more persuaded today, especially after hearing the vice chairman of the committee suggest that he is satisfied. I am much more persuaded at least on the merits of this.

But I still have a problem, and my problem is that the Senator from South Carolina and I have joined hands and knocked heads for the last 2 years on trying to get out what I would characterize as the most significant piece of anticrime legislation that we have been able to get out in this body since I have been here, and I have been here over a decade, not the length of time the Senator from South Carolina has been. And we made a commitment to one another at some jeopardy to both of us and each of our parties, and probably our home States, on this package. We would resist anything remotely approaching a controversial amendment, whether or not it was meritorious because we have seen too many of our efforts fail as a consequence of matters unrelated to the substance of our anticrime initiative.

And we have seen that anticrime initiative, nonetheless, fail because of matters that were not fully agreed on prior to coming to the floor with a package.

So I am going to, very reluctantly but, nonetheless, vote against not only to keep the commitment but because I think Senator THURMOND is correct that we should not encumber this legislation with something that is not—I cannot say it is unrelated because it is, it does have a relationship—but because it is one item that has not been fully aired, has not had hearings and, consequently, it will, I am confident, cause some difficulty for the package.

So I am going, to the extent that anyone wishes to listen to me, to urge my Democratic colleagues to not abandon the position but to suggest that this is not the vehicle. There will be several others to come up that it could be attached to.

So I plan on voting against it. This is as a consequence of my high regard and respect for the chairman of the Judiciary Committee who has kept his word every step of the way on keeping this legislation as clean as possible so we could get it through.

So I plan on voting against it, but I am not speaking on the merits of it. I am speaking to the procedural impact I believe it would have on the package.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I wish to join with the distinguished chairman and ranking minority member in stating that I will vote against this amendment or this series of amendments relating to this subject matter, and I urge Senators to do the same.

I do not speak to the relevance of this issue or its relative importance at this point.

But I am about to say something once again that may sound, to those who are not as familiar as we are with Senate procedure, cynical, but it is not. It is simply that we have to get on with the business at hand.

It would be so easy for this body to fall into a situation where it could never do anything if we all strive for absolute perfection or an expression of the last ounce of our own personal conviction or preference. And it is in the very essence of my job to see that the Senate does not become an ineffectual body, but that we do pass meaningful legislation.

In order to accomplish that, Mr. President, the chairman and ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee have brought us a crime package which has had stripped out of it the major controversies, that is, the death penalty, the habeas corpus rule, the exclusionary rule, the Federal Tort Claims Act, the Career Criminal Commission, and three others that I cannot recall off the top of my head. We took all of those things out of what otherwise might have been a comprehensive crime package and laid them aside with the expectation that if we would get something done we could pass a crime package. If we start adding those things back, Mr. President, we are sunk and we will do nothing.

If we add on to this package, I am very much afraid you will lose this package, and believe you me if we lose this package those other items have not got a prayer. Maybe they do not anyway. Who knows? But all I know is this bill, as reported by the Judiciary Committee, offers the best hope of the Senate making a meaningful and important statement on the subject of crime control in this session of Congress this year.

And I would hate to see it undone because we get embroiled in controversy on a wiretap issue.

We have addressed this issue before, Mr. President, and at length. I believe I am right when I say that in the aggregate we spent 7 years of Senate time working on the wiretap bill and the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, 4 years on one and 3 years on the other.

It was a difficult and tedious and sometimes painful balancing act that we went through before we finally made a statement of legislative purpose in those fields.

Mr. President, I do not think we should do it with these amendments on this bill at this time.

I urge Senators to consider that if this measure is adopted it may jeopardize the passage of this bill and, if this bill does not pass, you are not likely to make any statement on crime control in this session of Congress.

Mr. President, I tried all day yesterday to get this thing to a vote and I could not.

And I acknowledge and commend the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Arkansas for their efforts to try to work something out that was satisfactory and would make it acceptable and we could go forward, but we have invested a whole day in it yesterday and in my conversation with the sponsors of this amendment I have indicated to them that we need to get to a vote this afternoon.

I think we ought to have a vote on the merits up and down. And I believe they have informally agreed that that is what we ought to do.

So I do not plan to make a tabling motion, but I do urge Senators to consider that we need to get on with the business at hand and as soon as Members have said their piece and as close to 3 o'clock as we can make it, I hope we can get to a vote on these issues.

Now, may I make one further statement from a procedural standpoint? We are confronted with a second-degree amendment which has been modified to a first-degree amendment. In the normal sequence of things, the vote would occur first on the second-degree amendment and then on the first-degree amendment as amended if amended.

That is all right. We can have two votes. But as far as I am concerned, I would be willing—it does not require my consent, I believe—but I would be willing for the first-degree amendment to be modified to embrace the provisions of the second-degree amendment, and I would also be willing to provide by unanimous consent, if no one objects, that no other second-degree amendment would be in order so there would be no complication in that respect.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. BUMPERS. If the Senator will put it in a formal request that we do it, we will have one vote.

Mr. BAKER. May I inquire, is there any need for us to proceed further on clearance with the distinguished minority leader on that subject?

Based on the conversations I have already had with him, I feel certain he would not have any objection. If he does, I will proceed to try to undo it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, if the first-degree amendment of the distinguished Senator from Ohio (Senator METZENBAUM) is modified to embrace the provisions of the second-degree amendment as modified now pending, no further second-degree amendment to the Metzenbaum amendment as modified shall be in order during the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair, and I thank my friend.

Mr. METZENBAUM. If the majority leader can assure me that there will be no speeches, I had gems of wisdom I wanted to share with the colleagues but I am willing to put them in the RECORD and go to a vote immediately unless—I am sorry I spoke too soon. The Senator from Arkansas wishes to be heard.

Mr. BAKER. The chairman of the Intelligence Committee may wish to speak.

Mr. President, I yield.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I had the floor several times yesterday attempting to point out to my colleagues that the Metzenbaum amendment, as written and as modified, is not acceptable to the intelligence community. The main purpose may be misunderstood.

The amendment, as I have it now, is not specific enough. It does not mention the NSA. It does not mention the CIA, or the FBI or any other of the 19 different divisions of our intelligence family.

I can understand as thoroughly as any Senator on this floor the desire to make illegal the use of wiretapping. In fact, it already is. For any member of an intelligence agency or the FBI to employ wiretapping or any other kind of snooping device requires the permission of the Justice Department. The fact that one man acting on his own, where information to gather information about some other office, about some other man, or about some agency of absolutely no value to him is beside the point.

I would support an understandable, workable piece of legislation that would punish a person like that. But we find language, for example, such as a Government employee cannot "intercept a wire or oral communication, unless all parties to the communication have given prior consent to such interception."

That is not necessarily the method intelligence agencies use to find out things. You do not go to the man you are trying to interrogate and ask his permission to listen in on his conversations.

It goes on to provide an exception to the above: "investigative or law enforcement officers acting within the normal course of their employment" or others acting "under the direction or control of such" investigative or law enforcement officers.

Again, this is not specific. It does not say that the CIA shall not do it or the NSA is not allowed to do it. It merely picks out an employee. That gets to be a pretty big affair when we look at over 2½-million people working for the Federal Government.

I cannot add much to what I said yesterday. The whole subject of improper surveillance is a very, very broad one. For us to try to rewrite the law because one man in a stupid, uninformed, misinformed way took it onto himself to snoop on somebody else, I think would be a very dangerous mistake.

I think this is a serious enough matter that we should not act on it on the floor from merely an amendment. Not enough Members of the body have even heard about this. Not enough Members of the body have taken the trouble to read it.

I have told the Senator from Ohio, and I have told other interested Senators that if they so desire the Intelligence Committee would be very glad to hold hearings on this.

I think the Judiciary Committee would be the committee to assign this to. I know the chairman of the Judiciary Committee has no more tolerance for this act than I have or anyone else has.

To ask us to pass our judgment on something we know practically nothing about except we do not like it is like saying we are going to have a 55-mile speed limit and it works some places and it does not work other places. We do these things because we do not take the time to investigate.

I do not want to see anything happen that is going to slow down any activities of our intelligence community. I have to remind my colleagues that 10 years or so ago our intelligence agencies underwent a terrible castigation by the press, by the media, by Members of the Congress to the point that we nearly lost our intelligence-gathering ability. Now I am happy to say that it is coming back up, that we are building an intelligence community in this country that I would put maybe third or fourth. I would put it next to the Israeli Government I would certainly put it next to the English and next to the KGB.

The least we can do, and the least I can implore my colleagues to do, is not to act on this at the present time, but let us go through some hearings. We may turn up a lot of other things. There are all kinds of surveillance possible today.

As I mentioned yesterday, the Soviet Embassy in this town is covered with antenna directed at our conversations, friendly and family conversations. The Soviet Union in San Francisco has a greater surveillance capability than any agency of our Government, and much greater than it has here.

There has been a modification offered that was not seen by any of the law enforcement or intelligence agencies. We do not know what it means any more than we know what the original amendment meant when it was first offered. We found many problems with the first one. Give us time is all I ask to see if we harm intelligence or law enforcement.

I do not think there is a Member of this body who would want to feel that within a few weeks or few months, by their hurried-up action caused by one man, one man who did something indecent, illegal, unethical, they would want to harm the whole intelligence community to get even with somebody. We say, "This is only going to apply to people who work for the Federal Government." How about people who do not work for the Federal Government?

Yesterday I likened this to the bloodhound pushing his nose into every crack and crevice, looking for everything that he might get. Is that any more dangerous to us than some member of the Federal Government doing it? I do not think so.

Let me finish my few remarks, and I will make no more. I implore the writers of this amendment to seriously consider withdrawing it with the promise that I can give, that my committee will conduct very thorough hearings on this, probably far more thorough hearings than have ever been held in this country.

I cannot speak for the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, but I think he in a like manner, knowing him as I do, would want to conduct the same kind of hearings. But what we are doing, in a very punitive, small, misguided way, is inadvertently throwing a roadblock in the path of our intelligence agencies. We have had enough roadblocks thrown at those agencies in the past without this Congress going a step further.

Mr. President, I hope those colleagues who are responsible for the amendment, offered in good faith and good spirit, would reconsider and give us a chance to bring something back to the floor that has substance and reason to it.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABDNOR). The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am very concerned about this because for the last 7 years we spent our time working on the Criminal Code, the Criminal Code revisions, this anticrime package, up and down the field of criminal law. We have had extensive hearings and extensive debate within the committee. We have had all kinds of effort by almost everybody in a bipartisan way to resolve the issues involving criminal law. I think we have accommodated almost everybody we possibly could.

Everybody knows that this anticrime package is not everything some of us would like it to be, and I might add some of us on both sides of the aisle. Everybody knows we have tried to accommodate those whose positions and opinions are different, and everybody knows there has been a lot of time, effort, thought, and constructive work put into this.

I might also add that most of that constructive work has been backed up by extensive hearings, in an extensive hearings process.

It bothers me that in the middle of this particular bill, about which many of us on both sides of the aisle have worked and tried to resolve issues, we suddenly have this amendment, or another amendment, and then this amendment brought up, and we are not even sure exactly of the length or extent to which this amendment really applies.

I can think of a number of areas, and I am sure some if not all have been mentioned here on the floor. I do not mean to belabor them, but if I were to pick just one area, that would be the area of people who call to extort you or try to bribe you or do other things in Government. You ought to be able to record whatever they say.

The blind have need to record. I do not even know, and nobody here on the floor even knows, how many other areas may be legitimate areas where recordings probably should be permitted or at least criminal sanctions should not be incurred under those circumstances.

That is why I think we ought to have hearings on this.

I just hope our colleagues in the Senate will give the Judiciary Committee credit for the amount of hearings we have held and the effort we put forth in trying to get to the bottom of these matters, and give some credence to the chairman of this committee and the chairman of the appropriate subcommittee, both of whom, as I understand it, have represented on the floor of the Senate that they will hold hearings on this and see if it can be resolved in a reasonable way so that it is not just a helter-skelter amendment, the extent of which nobody here on the floor today, no matter how vast their knowledge might be, can really describe and describe accurately.

I hope our colleagues will vote this amendment down, because I think we ought to pass this anticrime package, this bipartisan package. It has taken a lot of effort of everybody on the Judiciary Committee. I do not think that, just to teach a lesson to one individual in our society, who is not used to Washington as much as so many people feel he should be, we should suddenly go with an amendment like this, where there is no hearing record to back it up or even a complete understanding of what it may mean.

I commend those who try to do this to the extent that I know they are trying to resolve ills and wrongs in our society that none of us really want to tolerate or even have any appreciation for. I suggest that we go through the hearing process. Those offers have been made and I think we should do everything we possibly can to try to give credence to what the distinguished chairman of this committee and the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Intelligence have recommended on the floor of the Senate. I hope my colleagues will vote this down and consider turning it over to the hearings of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I hoped we would be at a vote earlier than this. I understand my colleague from Arkansas wishes to speak for 6 or 7 minutes. As the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Arizona chose to raise a few points, I shall speak for a few minutes and modify my amendment and call for the yeas and nays and go to a vote.

I point out to my friend from Arizona that he overlooked the language which followed the word "or" in line 12, which provides an exemption from the provisions. It says or such person is "an investigative or law enforcement, security, foreign intelligence or counterintelligence officer acting within the normal course of his or her employment."

It goes on, in case the first exemption was not strong enough. It provides a second exemption for a person performing a law enforcement, security, foreign intelligence, or counterintelligence function and so on.

Then we put in a broad-based exemption for people the Attorney General authorizes and for people acting in accordance with guidelines or regulations issued by the Attorney General. It originally provided for regulations only. The Attorney General indicated concern because he had to go through the Administrative Procedures Act. We said, good enough, he can use guidelines if appropriate, instead.

Then we provided additional exemptions which Senator BUMPERS has also explained.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. METZENBAUM. Yes.

Mr. GOLDWATER. The agencies have not seen this language.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I am glad the Senator said that. I could not be more pleased.

I have been in this body many years less than my colleague from Arizona, but I have been here long enough and I have been engaged in enough debates and enough battles on the floor of the Senate. I know of no instance in the past when I have done what I did in this instance. I said on the floor of the Senate, I said in the reception room outside, I said it again this morning, "NSA, CIA, USIA—anybody—come forth and tell us what amendment you want." So when you say they have not seen the amendment, let me say my efforts to communicate with them have been as strong as any I have ever seen.

I said to the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. LAXALT) yesterday in unequivocal terms, "Tell me what you want and I will give it to you."

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield on that?

Mr. METZENBAUM. No, I shall not yield. I am not going to yield at this point. I did not interrupt when he spoke. The distinguished chairman of the Intelligence Committee asked me a question. I would like to conclude my remarks. I am not looking to win this debate. I want it to go to a vote. The majority leader wants it to go to a vote. There are a few comments I wish to make, then I am prepared to move along.

When some members of the Intelligence Committee, including the vice chairman, came up with some ideas to make additional exemptions, we included them. We did not even negotiate. I have never gone as far as I have gone in connection with this legislation, and indicated a willingness to accept whatever the intelligence community felt they needed.

I have even gone further than that here. I have said if the amendment gets through the Senate and there is some confusion, some problem, some complication, I shall be the one who will go to the House and ask it to change the amendment.

The issue before us, I say to the Members of the Senate, is simple: Are you for or are you against unauthorized secret taping by Government officials? That is all the issue is. Are you for or against upholding that long-cherished American value, the right to privacy? That is the only thing we are talking about.

We have heard from opponents that passage of this amendment would bring the entire law enforcement and national security apparatus to a screeching halt. We have exemptions for law enforcement activities, and for intelligence activities. We have even given the Attorney General broad discretion to authorize wire or oral interceptions for other purposes.

There was some concern that the legislation applied to third-person wiretapping. We have exempted that from our language. We have exempted wiretapping that a Government official or a Government employee may do in his own home. Instead, we address that which he does in an official capacity. Still, we are told that is inadequate.

It is a fact that the Senator from Ohio offered this amendment several days ago and it is a fact that the Senator from Arkansas offered his second-degree amendment several days ago. It also is a fact that neither of us has asked for the yeas and nays.

Why did we not ask for the yas and nays? So we would have an opportunity to amend without parliamentary complications if somebody from the Government came to us and said, "We need this provision in the law." I have never, in my experience, found a government so obdurate, so indifferent, so silent, so unwilling to speak.

I spoke with some of them out here yesterday and they said, "It is just too complicated. We cannot understand it."

What is so complicated that you cannot fiigure out a way to exempt that which you are doing?

We said time and time again, we would accept an amendment to exempt national security or law enforcement activity. But the agencies have not produced a single sheet of paper.

As a matter of fact, to indicate this indifference, yesterday afternoon, when the Senate was still negotiating on this issue, one of the Members on that side was looking for the members of the Department of Justice. But it was time for them to quit, so they went home. They were nowhere to be found.

They have told us they cannot help improve the amendment because they do not really know what is wrong with it. We are told we need hearings. We adopt a lot of matters here on the floor that are a lot more substantive than this one without hearings and we do it as a normal part of our process. I am starting to wonder, Mr. President, what is this whole thing about?

I am beginning to think there is a lot more secret taping going on in this Government than any of us imagined. I am not talking about legitimate security or law enforcement taping; I am talking about all of the other agencies. What are they doing? I sense that there is considerable taping that does not fall within these exemptions. Why else would the administration refuse to offer specific language?

I might say that I do not consider this an antiadministration measure. I just do not understand why the administration has not been forthcoming with some specific language.

We have said again and again that we will accommodate any national security problem. If there is some other problem, some other activity we do not know about, maybe we shall accommodate that. But at least, we ought to be informed.

The fact is, Mr. President, that the national security and law enforcement argument against this amendment is a smoke screen. There is absolutely no reason to oppose this amendment for national security reasons. We can perfect it in a matter of minutes. The only thing preventing us from doing so is the refusal of the agencies involved to come forward with specific proposals.

Let us be clear about one fact: The issue here is not national security or law enforcement; it is whether the Senate wants to make a forceful statement that Government officials should not secretly tape the conversations of American citizens. Do we want to make a forceful statement on the side of privacy or do we want to let the best chance we shall have to prohibit this practice disappear beneath the shroud of a vague national security question?

Mr. President, I understand my colleague from Arkansas has a few more minutes of debate. Following that, if my colleague from Utah does not have too many gems of wisdom, I am prepared to go forward with a vote up or down.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I shall not take much time. I am not sure my arguments differ that much from those of the Senator from Ohio. I do not particularly like this practice of tape recording people without their knowledge, either, and I do not know anybody who does. But this is now, I think, the fourth proposal that has been made since the distinguished Senators from Arkansas and Ohio brought this matter up. It has been modified and modified until the last version is "as further modified."

If that does not tell us something, I do not know what does, because what it is saying is that as sincere as my two colleagues are, and I know they are and I am not saying I differ too much from them, they have had to make one modification right here on the floor. We do that all the time, but we are talking about criminal law in this society. We are talking about an amendment here that is a wide, sweeping amendment that cuts across the whole Federal scene. Nobody here, and I am not sure anybody there in the Justice Department or in the myriad agencies of Government, knows what this really means as it applies to them.

As I understand, the distinguished chairman of the Intelligence Committee has offered to hold hearings on this. He empathizes with the goals here. The distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee has offered to hold hearings. He is empathetic.

The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Senator LAXALT, from Nevada, would like to hold hearings. I think it deserves that type of consideration. What I have difficulties with is I do not want to see this anticrime package do down because we have a problem here with this one amendment, because nobody fully knows what it means, including the authors of it, and they admit that. I do not think it is good enough to just stand here and say you will work with the House to change the language later. I suspect I will be on the conference committee, but that does not necessarily mean we will be able to arrive at any degree of consensus by the time we get this matter done.

If this was the normal run-of-the-mill piece of legislation, I could understand maybe trying to amend it in this way with modification upon modification, with change upon change, with language upon language. But this is not. This is something that we have worked on for years. It is a far cry from what many of us would like it to be, but it is a step in the right direction, and it is bipartisan.

I have heard remarks from colleagues that this amendment alone could shoot this down. Now, I hope that is not true also, assuming this amendment might pass. I hope it does not. But I would hate to see this whole crime package jeopardized because of a desire to solve a problem that cannot be solved through exigency but can be solved in the normal legislative process of hearing and working together. I believe there is good faith intention to do that.

Now, I admit that there is much to be said in criticizing what has gone on by the one individual who in my opinion has made some mistakes here and as far as I am concerned has had all the public condemnation that anybody is going to get for that type of a mistake. I am not sure that that mistake or series of mistakes justifies trying on the floor of the Senate to ignore all of the myriad complications that this particular amendment actually consists of.

I have worked pretty hard on this package, as have many others on the Judiciary Committee and elsewhere. I think I understand a little bit about criminal law, but I have to admit I do not know the full implications of this amendment. I can think off the top of my head of a number of instances where this amendment could jeopardize the rights of people that presently exist and could make it very difficult in ways that literally were never intended by the authors of this amendment or anybody else on the floor of the Senate.

I just end by saying I have empathy for what the two distinguished Senators are trying to do. I think it is the wrong way to do it. I think we have plenty of good faith representations as to how this could be done, how it could be done in an intelligent, thoughtful way. All I can say is this has been going on for a number of months. Why did the distinguished sponsors of this particular amendment not bring it up several months ago during the committee process? I do not object to them legislating by headline, that is all right, but what I do object to is faulty legislating by headline.

I do not think we can tolerate that particularly in the context of criminal law where individual liberties are so directly at stake. I do not know what the end result of this is, and that is one reason why we ought to have hearings and do it the right way. With the representations of the distinguished chairman of the Intelligence Committee and those of the full committee and subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee and the rest of us who are as interested in this issue as I am sure the two distinguished Senators are who are pushing this particular amendment, I hope our colleagues will vote this down for now and let us see if we can bring it up in a more pure form with all the advantages and benefits of the various agencies of Government appearing at full-fledged hearings where they are going to have to stand up and justify their particular positions.

Right now it is pretty tough to ask them to do it just out in the hallway, in the reception room, or even after the fact in a conference, or even during the debate on the House floor. I prefer to do it in a more professional way, and I hope that we can. I surely hope that the two distinguished Senators would either withdraw this amendment or that we will vote it down as Members of the Senate. I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I will just take a few moments to sort of summarize and review where we are and where we started. I must say that I cannot fathom most of the objections I have heard to this amendment. Under existing law, anybody who tape records a telephone conversation of anybody else and is acting under "color of law" is exempt. Anybody who tape records a criminal or tortious act or threat is exempt.

Let me say, first of all, the law is unclear and has been for centuries on what "color of law" means. There just never has been a uniform definition of the term "color of law," and yet under existing law, the law is that if you tape record a telephone conversation with another party and you are acting under color of law, that is exempt.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield for an impression on just one comment?

Mr. BUMPERS. Yes.

Mr. HATCH. I believe under this modified version, which is a fourth modification, as I recall, the criminal or tortious threat is not included. Now, I like the idea; I think it is a good idea, but if the Senator will look at your version now, it is not even in that version. It has been taken out.

That is one of the points I am having difficulties with—it has been changed so many times on the floor. Can you imagine what will really happen if we have a hearing and look at it as thoroughly as we can?

Mr. BUMPERS. Well, let me just continue if I may. And now we have modified the bill after several days of waiting for the intelligence community to tell us what they did not like about this. We have modified the bill at the suggestion of some members of the Intelligence Committee, but we had already changed the bill to really give the intelligence community a broader exemption than they already had. I think even the Senator from Utah will agree with me that color of law is not a clearly defined term. And so what we have done is exempt the intelligence community, foreign intelligence, counterintelligence, and allow for such further exemption as the Attorney General may prescribe by rules and regulations. Right now under existing law somebody in the intelligence community may tape-record and he might be subject to challenge because he is not operating under color of law.

Under our amendment, he would not be subject to challenge because he is acting in an official capacity and is a member of the intelligence-gathering community. How much bigger exemption can you give the intelligence community? I am beginning to wonder if they are up to something I do not know about because their opposition to this just does not make any sense to me.

We have included counterintelligence-gathering activities. The problem with the existing law is that there is an exception that negates the entire statute, and it is that as long as one party to the conversation knows it is being taped, it is OK. I can call any of the other 99 Senators of the Senate and tape-record our conversation with absolute immunity and I do not have to tell them the conversation is being taped. That is what this amendment is designed to correct.

Is that complicated? Does that sound like it is going to create a lot of prolonged litigation? I am saying that it is indecent, it is uncivil, it is unfair, and it is a terrible, outrageous, egregious invasion of people's privacy, to call them on the telephone and record their conversation without telling them it is being recorded.

I have repeatedly compared it to window peeping, odious as that is. It is the same thing. It is no more odious than this is. We are not trying to hamstring the FBI, DIA, CIA, NSA, nobody, who has a legitimate right. This amendment does not hamstring anybody that has a legitimate right in the Federal Government.

You walk around the Capitol Grounds and ask the tourists: "Do you think it ought to be against the law for somebody to tape record a conversation with you and not tell you?" And the normal answer will be, "You mean it isn't already?" The answer is, "No, it is not." It is in 13 States, and I applaud the enlightenment of those 13 States. This amendment does not go nearly as far as it ought to go. It ought not just apply to Federal employees. It ought to apply to every man and woman in the United States. All I have heard is, No. 1, you are going to create all kinds of prolonged litigation. No. 2, you are going to hamstring everybody in the Federal Government. You have already modified it, and there is no telling how many different exemptions ought to be in this bill that you do not have. We have waited patiently day after day after day for somebody to tell us what they are, and nobody has come forward with one. You should vote for this amendment if you think it is an invasion of privacy and basically unfair to record telephone conversations without having the decency to tell the party on the other end you are doing it.

Vote for it if you believe that is unfair, and vote against it if you do not think that is unfair. The lines are drawn just that simply.

I have heard that this is going to take this crime package down. I must say that I had intended to vote for this crime package, regardless of what happened to this amendment. I applaud the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Delaware and everybody else who had anything to do with crafting this bill. It is long overdue. But if it is so weak and tenuous that an amendment that prohibits one of the most indecent things I can imagine—if that bill is so fragile that it is going down because you put this amendment on it, I am not sure I want to vote for it in the first place.

The House has not passed a bill. The House has not agreed to this package. They do not have to pass a bill. If they do, they have to go to conference with us. Nobody believes for an instant that their bill is going to imitate ours. There will be a conference.

If the House thinks this is bad, they will not agree to it, and it will never see the light of day.

Wait, wait, wait. Let us do this; let us do that. There may be something here we do not know about.

I must say, in all fairness, that I have been here 9 years, and that is not the first time I have heard those arguments used; but I can tell you that when something needs to be tended to by legislation in this body, all those arguments ought to fall.

George Orwell is surely smiling from ear to ear, wherever he is. Here it is 1984, with a technological explosion and the ability to eavesdrop and to spy and to invade privacy 10 times greater than even Orwell imagined in his magnificent vision of the future. There are microphones so precise that you can pinpoint them at someone 100 yards away and understand his conversation. Big Brother is watching.

This is a very simple amendment just to keep our privacy, and there are all these specious arguments about how you may impinge on this and you may impinge on that.

The intelligence community does an excellent job, and I have no quarrel with it. There is not one thing in this amendment that will hamstring the intelligence community for an instant. As I said, they probably have more authority under the amendment than they do without it.

Mr. President, as I say, we have waited patiently to hear from the intelligence community or anybody else—or the administration—who says this amendment is fatally flawed. What is flawed about it? I am telling you that the silence of the response has been deafening.

The suggestion has been made that because of the Charles Wick affair, it is a slap at the President. It has nothing to do with the President. But I will remind you that what Charles Wick did was a violation of the Federal regulation, and I ask you what happened to Charles Wick for tape recording 80 telephone conversations. Nothing. Not so much as a slap on the back of the hand for calling up a former President of the United States—Wick initiated the call—and then recording the conversation. He called Jim Baker, the President's No. 1 aide, who could surely have the President fire him and hire him at the drop of a hat, and taped that conversation without telling him. And Charles Wick is still in his job. Not so much as even a small reprimand.

If you want to take a slap at the President, do it because he did not deal with that in an administrative way as he should have. But do not say there is something flawed about this amendment, when nothing has happened to Charles Wick for an egregious offense against the privacy of other people. If this amendment fails, Charles Wick and all his ilk will continue to do exactly what they have been doing, because there is no reason to believe anybody is going to get a reprimand.

Mr. President, we have modified the amendment to say that, first of all, it covers only Federal employees; second, that employee has to be operating in an official capacity. Third, we have added the term "security" to the exemption, so that the Secret Service and anybody else who is furnishing security services in the administration or in the Federal Government are also exempt.

We have said that third parties who happen to be listening, such as a wiretap, are excluded because they are covered by other provisions in title 18.

Finally, we have reduced it from felony status to misdemeanor status. We have reduced the penalty from 5 years and a $10,000 fine to 6 months and a $1,000 fine.

When you have the administration, the majority leader, and the intelligence community all saying, "But, but, but," there are going to be a lot of "But" votes.

I am going to tell you something: I believe this issue is broader than most people think. I know that everybody who votes "No" is going to go home and say, "I really hated to vote against that, but it would hamstring our intelligence-gathering activities," and no red-blooded American patriot wants to do that.

You had better check the statutes carefully, to make sure, and you had better check your opponent very carefully, to make sure he does not know what it is about, because he will come back and say the intelligence community had a broader exemption under the amendment you voted against than they did before the amendment was offered.

Finally, this is not an end-all, be-all, civil libertarian issue. But to stand by and not redress a problem of this magnitude is an abdication of our responsibility.

Why do we consider ourselves different from the Soviets, a country the Senator from Ohio and I visited about 6 months ago? We found it so odious because everything is wiretapped; every conversation is monitored by the State. God, how offensive it was to be in a society where people are afraid to speak, even on the streets, for fear they are being wiretapped or overheard and for fear of that midnight knock on the door.

This is just a small, embryonic thing. It should have been redressed many years ago.

We pride ourselves on our freedom of privacy. We pride ourselves on all those freedoms, and we pride ourselves on being different, as a democracy, from those totalitarian States where everything is monitored.

This debate reminds me of people sitting around the coffee shop condemning Government, and every time they condemn Government and erode the confidence of people in Government, freedom becomes a little shakier. They erode their own freedoms as well as denigrating Congress.

It may be that this speech is entirely too loud for the magnitude of the proposition, but I happen to be especially concerned in remembering that this is 1984 and recalling reading Orwell's "1984." And I also think of wading through Thomas Jefferson's biography and finding, time and time again, where Thomas Jefferson warned us about how those little acorns of invasions of constitutional freedoms become big oak trees, and freedoms are gone before you realize that the tree has grown completely out of control.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I regret that the sponsors of this amendment have not seen fit to withdraw it. The Judiciary Committee has worked for several years to bring to the floor a package of crime bills to try to reduce crime in this country. The crime situation in this country has gotten out of hand.

There is a murder committed in this country every 25 seconds, a forcible rape every 7 minutes, a robbery every 59 seconds, an aggravated assault every 49 seconds, a burglary every 9 seconds, a larceny theft every 4 seconds, a motor vehicle theft every 30 seconds. There is a crime committed in this country, on average, every 2 seconds.

Mr. President, the Judiciary Committee has worked hard to try to prepare a package here that would be noncontroversial. We tried to agree on those matters that the members of the committee felt were important to the public good and could be enacted on a consensus basis.

The administration sent down a crime legislative program that included the matters in this package and several others that are controversial, such as the death penalty. We took out those that were controversial. No one expected this package to be amended with controversial issues. Senator BIDEN, the able ranking member of the committee, and I, and the members of the committee, felt we had a noncontroversial consensus bill that would help the public good and that we had all agreed on. Now we have an amendment here that can destroy that consensus.

If this amendment is adopted, I do not know what will happen to this bill. The whole effect that we have exerted for several years may go down the drain. The President may see fit to veto this because, the way it is drafted, this amendment is a dangerous amendment. They got up the amendment hurriedly. It is ill-written. It is ill-prepared.

And in the words of the Justice Department:

. . . Mr. Chairman, we believe very strongly that the amendment at hand is a gravely flawed product and that its approval at this time would be the height of irresponsibility.

Who is that talking? That is the Justice Department that stands for justice, that stands for law and order. It is the highest Department of law and order in this country. Are you going to believe them?

They go further and say:

Were we to endeavor to draft such a prohibition in the form of an amendment to the very technical and closely inter-related wiretap laws, we would proceed with utmost caution and subject such a proposal to careful review not only within the Department of Justice but among all other Federal agencies as well.

Other Federal agences are interested. The FBI is interested. The Central Intelligence Agency is interested.

The National Security Agency, which is to protect the national security of this Nation, is interested. Here is a letter from them opposing this amendment:

In addition, we would think that the public should be given an opportunity to review and comment upon such legislation. Such careful review is, we believe, essential to avoid producing adverse effects far beyond those intended by the authors of the amendment. As currently written, the amendment would be a serious impediment to law enforcement and intelligence activities at a time when we should be strengthening our ability to deal with crime and terrorism.

Mr. President, you heard the chairman of the Intelligence Committee here talk on this subject. Senator GOLDWATER has stated emphatically that he does not know what this amendment means. It is a dangerous amendment. And you cannot write an amendment like this just in a day or so. This is a complicated matter. There should be hearings on it. Senator GOLDWATER says he will hold hearings on it. Senator PAUL LAXALT, the chairman of the Criminal Law Subcommittee, says that he will hold hearings, report to the full Judiciary Committee and we will take prompt action.

Why the rush all of a sudden? Why the rush? Why not take time and work on this bill. Give all the agencies of Government and give the public a chance to come in and express themselves. Then we will come out with a sound bill that we can probably all support.

Mr. President, I just want to say that this package contains bail reform. Did you know right now a Federal judge cannot refuse bail to a defendant except as a flight risk—not danger? He may have killed six people and is charged with killing another man, and the judge cannot refuse bail to protect the community. All he can do is fix the amount of bail. We think if the judge determines that this man is a menace to society and a danger to the public he ought to have the right to deny him bail until his trial is held. That is what a provision in this package provides for on bail reform.

And we have sentencing reform. We have forfeiture. We have insanity defense. We are narrowing the defense and shifting the burden of proof to the defendant rather than requiring the Government to prove sanity beyond a reasonable doubt.

We have justice assistance, surplus Federal property for correction purposes amendment, a labor racketeering amendment, Foreign Currency and Transaction Reporting Act improvements, and violent crime amendments.

Mr. President, I gave you the figures on violent crime here a few moments ago. As to the violent crimes in this country, the 1982 report shows there was a violent crime committed every 3 seconds. These 1,285,705 violent crimes were committed in the United States that year.

Mr. President, we are trying to do something about this. We are trying to help the public. The public is crying to Congress to act. That is what we are trying to do.

I plead with the Senators to pass this package that is agreed to by Senator BIDEN and myself. It is favored by the full Judiciary Committee. It is favored by the administration. It is favored by the Justice Department. It is favored by the CIA. It is favored by the FBI. And it is favored by the NSA. It is favored by Senator GOLDWATER, chairman of the Intelligence Committee. And it is favored by the majority leader of this Senate.

Mr. President, how much longer is the public going to have to wait? If this amendment should cause a veto of this package, then we would have to start all over again. It may be several years more before we can agree upon such a package.

I hope the Senate will see fit to defeat this amendment. Let us pass this package.

Mr. President, that is not the way to legislate. The way to legislate in the Senate is the regular way. Let important bills go to a committee. Let the committee give careful consideration and due deliberation to them. Then bring them to the Senate. Then we know what we are doing. Again, I say I hope the Senate will see fit to defeat this amendment.

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I commend the Senators from Ohio and Arkansas for their amendment. I will vote against the amendment because I share the conviction of the chairman and ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee and the chairman of the Criminal Law Subcommittee that the criminal law reforms contained in this bill are so essential and long overdue that they should not be jeopardized by the addition of controversial amendments to this measure.●

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I wish to share with my colleagues the reasons for the vote that I am about to cast on the Metzenbaum/Bumpers amendment, No. 2689, to the Comprehensive Crime Control Act, S. 1762.

As the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the ranking minority member have pointed out, this crime bill has been delicately balanced to give it a genuine chance of becoming law. Our country's crime problem is a matter of prime importance and a federal response is absolutely necessary.

While I share Senator METZENBAUM's belief that it ought to be illegal to tape record telephone conversations without the consent of both parties, it is evident from the last 2 days' discussion of this amendment that there are technical and substantive problems with this amendment that, if passed, could jeopardize the passage of the Crime Control Act. Because of this, I shall cast my vote against the Metzenbaum/Bumpers amendment, and urge my colleagues to do so as well.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have voted against the Metzenbaum amendment because it departs from the fundamental principle of American jurisprudence that a criminal statute applies to all without an overriding reason for that distinction. Although there are other difficulties with the amendment, this factor was my primary motivation.

The amendment would make it a crime for a public official to do an act that would be perfectly lawful if performed by anyone else. It does so even though the act—recording one's own telephone conversation without the express consent of the other party to the conversation—does not require any use of power unique to public officials, but can be performed by anyone.

In order to maintain the basic fairness of American law, it must apply equally to all. Accordingly, criminal statutes apply to the rich, powerful, and those in public office as well as to everyone else.

Statutes, like bribery, prohibiting misuse of government office are not analogous to the Metzenbaum amendment. Only the officeholder can misuse the office. Anyone can misuse the telephone.

There is much to recommend a law, like the one I enforced so a prosecuting attorney in Pennsylvania, which would prohibit anyone from recording a telephone conversations without the consent of all parties. Hearings should be held on such a bill, as promised by the distinguished chairman of the Criminal Law Subcommittee, Senator LAXALT, before deciding on the passage of such a bill.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I have cosponsored and will vote for the Bumpers/Metzenbaum amendment to S. 1762, which amends section 2511 of title 18 of the United States Code, to prevent Government officials from taperecording conversations unless all parties to the conversation have given their prior consent. The current law is deficient because it permits oral or wire interceptions to a communication where one of the parties to the communication has given prior consent to such interception.

The Charles Wick episode has dramatically demonstrated the need to amend the current law to narrow this broad exception in the wiretap statute. The right to privacy is guaranteed by the Constitution. It is particularly important that Government officials refrain from taking any actions which might undermine that right. Regulations promulgated by the GSA on Federal agency taping of telephone conversations recognize the importance of restricting such invasions of privacy. These regulations prohibit consensual listening-in or recording of telephone conversations except when performed under one of the delineated exceptions to the regulations. Unfortunately, the GSA regulations lack an effective enforcement mechanism.

The intent of the amendment is simply to change the law so that taping of telephone conversation by Government officials will be prohibited in the future under Federal law unless all parties to the conversation have given their prior consent. The amendment will make all Americans more secure in their right to privacy and I applaud Senators BUMPERS and METZENBAUM for bringing this matter before the Senate.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I now modify my first-degree amendment by adding in lieu thereof all the terms of the second-degree amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, could I make an inquiry of the distinguished Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. THURMOND. As I understand it, the majority leader said he wishes to have one vote on this matter.

Mr. METZENBAUM. That is right. We have done that by modifying the first-degree amendment by inserting in lieu thereof all the terms of the second-degree amendment. It is our intention to have one vote. Of course, if there is a motion to reconsider or something like that, that is another matter.

Mr. THURMOND. I understand the Senator prefers an up-and-down vote, not a tabling motion.

Mr. METZENBAUM. The Senator from South Carolina is 100 percent accurate.

Mr. THURMOND. We are amenable to that.

VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 2689, AS FURTHER MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, of the Senator from Ohio.

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG) and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

Mr. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. GLENN), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HART), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), and the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPECTER). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 51, as follows:

So the amendment (No. 2689), as further modified, was rejected.

Mr. THURMOND. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LEAHY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am pleased that the Senate is now considering the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1983. I can think of no topic more deserving of the Senate's consideration, and I commend the chairman of ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee for their leadership of this matter.

This legislation is an extensive revision of current Federal laws regarding bail, sentencing, forfeiture, insanity defense, drug penalties, and a number of other Federal provisions. It is a major step toward bringing our Federal statutes and procedures into the 1980's. I am proud to be a cosponsor.

I am hopeful that these revisions will expedite the processes of the Federal justice system while protecting all concerned—the defendant, law enforcement officials, the victim, and the public.

Our Nation's criminal justice system represents an enormous amount of public resources. Expenditures were estimated for a recent year at $26 billion in Federal, State, and local spending including $13.8 billion for police, $6 billion for prisons, $3.4 billion for courts, $2.2 billion for attorneys and investigators, and $500 million for other services.

While the Federal role could be described as modest in comparison with State and local efforts, it is a crucial role. We in the Congress need to make sure Federal procedures and substantive law provisions enhance the effort that must be made at the Federal level.

Among the most distributing crime-related statistics is the increase in the public's fear of crime. Numerous public opinion surveys have documented that public concern about, and apprehension of, crime has grown. Unfortunately, these fears are often well-founded.

In 1981, almost a third of American households were victims of violence or theft. While the Uniform Crime Report issued last fall for January to June 1983 crimes indicate a decrease of 5 percent in the number of offenses reported as compared with the same period a year earlier, this statistic is little reassurance to those whose lives have been touched by crime. Moreover, it is sobering to all of us to hear that a murder is committed every 23 minutes, a rape every 6 minutes, a robbery every 58 seconds, and a burglary every 8 seconds.

This bill will not solve the criminal justice crisis in this country. It will, however, help. It is a step in the right direction. This country needs a bipartisan, comprehensive commitment to crime reduction. This legislation is an important part of that effort.

Some of the major provisions are:

First, bail reform: Amends the Bail Reform Act of 1966 to address among other things, the need to: (a) consider community safety in setting nonfinancial pretrial conditions of release; (b) expand the list of statutory release conditions; (c) permit the pretrial detention of defendants as to whom no conditions or release will assure their appearance at trial.

Second, sentencing reform: Abolishes parole and establishes a sentencing commission to issue sentencing guidelines.

Third, criminal forfeiture: Enhances the requirement that convicted defendant forfeit to the Government the profits of his drug or organized crime enterprise.

Fourth, insanity: Defines the insanity defense, and shifts the burden of proof to the defendant to prove he was insane.

Fifth, drug enforcement amendments: Substantially increases the fines for drug trafficking and the penalties for trafficking in amounts of the most dangerous drugs.

Sixth, justice assistance: Authorizes a modest program of financial assistance to State and local law enforcement to help finance anticrime programs of proven effectiveness.

Public safety officers' death benefits: Provides for payment of $50,000 to a prescribed survivor of a public safety officer who dies from personal injury sustained in the line of duty.

FBI training of State and local criminal justice personnel.

Emergency Federal law enforcement assistance: Authorizes Federal assistance to any State the Attorney General approves as a law enforcement emergency jurisdiction in emergency situations.

Seventh, surplus Federal property: Provides for transfer of unused surplus Federal property to the States to help alleviate overcrowded jail facilities.

Eighth, labor racketeering amendments: Increases penalties for labor racketeering and supplements the list of crimes which disqualify defendants from holding union-related positions.

Ninth, currency and foreign transaction reporting amendments: Increases penalties for false reporting and tightens existing law.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I support the comprehensive crime control bill and urge my colleagues to join me in voting for its passage. The provisions of the bill will give our criminal justice system major new tools in fighting crime in the United States.

Our country is losing ground in its battle against the lawless. Organized crime is flourishing; individuals are committing crime with impunity. Criminals are all too aware that our society has hamstrung itself with laws and court decisions that have made it almost impossible for law enforcement officials to stop them. The bill we are presented with today reverses the past trend of favoring the criminal over the victim or society itself.

The most important provision of the bill, in my opinion, is the reform of our bail laws. I have worked for many years on the Judiciary Committee, along with my colleagues from both parties, to come up with a meaningful reform of our absolutely irresponsible system of bail. It is incomprehensible to me that our judges are prevented by law from considering the likelihood that a defendant accused of a violent or drug-related crime, is going to commit another. I believe that the preventive detention provision of this bill is vital in restoring balance to our justice system.

I am also pleased that the comprehensive crime control bill retains a provision which is of particular interest to me in the area of bail for drug law offenders. This provision creates a presumption that a defendant accused of a serious drug violation is automatically dangerous to the community and must be detained prior to trial. This provision will go a long way toward closing the revolving door that our jails have developed into.

I have long supported many of the other provisions of this bill. Among those I consider to be vital are the reform of our sentencing procedures, an expedited forfeiture provision which will allow the Government to seize the proceeds and equipment used in criminal activity, an increase in penalties from major drug law violations, a reversal of the burden of proof in insanity cases to put the burden on the defendant to prove his insanity, an increase in penalties for labor racketeering and an expansion of the offenses which preclude an individual from holding union-related positions, and the modest program of financial assistance to State and local law enforcement agencies for programs that have proven to be effective in fighting crime. There are other important provisions in the bill which I also support.

Although I believe the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 is a major step forward, I would have reached even farther. I supported efforts to include in this legislation provisions providing for a Federal death penalty, a modification of the so-called exclusionary rule, and a provision creating an overall coordinator of our illegal drug law efforts.

While I am disappointed that these additional provisions were not included in the bill, I am firmly convinced that the comprehensive crime control bill is a good bill and is absolutely necessary to provide law enforcement officers, prosecutors, judges, and corrections officials, the necessary tools to fight back against crime. While I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this legislation today, I am confident that the bill will pass this body overwhelmingly. I believe that more than just my colleagues' votes are needed to see this bill enacted into law. I believe it is necessary that we encourage our colleagues in the House of Representatives to take quick action on this bill. I intend to do so. I am hopeful that our efforts here will not be in vain.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I am pleased to join as a cosponsor of S. 1762, the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1983. This legislation is the product of a lengthy bipartisan effort on behalf of the Senate Judiciary Committee and many other Members of this distinguished body. Major changes must be made in the Federal criminal laws. During my term in the U.S. Senate, I have expressed a deep concern about the staggering increase in crime. The people of this country have been calling for tougher action on crime, and they certainly are correct in doing so. The Department of Justice has reported that in 1982 almost one-third of all the households in the United States were victimized by crime. The time for action is now. S. 1762 offers an answer.

Under the provisions of this legislation, judges will be able to consider the possible danger to the community when determining whether a defendant awaiting trial should be released on bail. Most importantly, danger to the community will be presumed if the defendant is accused of a serious drug trafficking offense or has used a firearm during the commission of a violent crime. This action is long overdue.

Major provisions of this bill deal with sentencing reform. As a cosponsor of S. 668, the separate bill to reform the Federal criminal sentencing procedures, I am pleased to see this inclusion in the comprehensive bill. Under this legislation, reforms in the guidelines for sentencing and parole will be made more clear and the Federal courts will be required to follow guidelines which would assure that criminals who commit similar Federal offenses receive similar sentences and serve similar terms. The Government will also be able to appeal any sentence which is more lenient than the sentence guidelines.

Also included in this bill is a revision of the Federal insanity defense. During the extensive congressional debate on the insanity defense which took place after John Hinckley was acquitted, I introduced S. 2669, a bill which would have corrected the obvious deficiencies in the application of this defense. Many of the points raised in that bill have become a part of the compromise provisions which are presently included in this crime package. Two of the most significant changes that this bill would make are placing the burden of proving the insanity defense on the defendant and providing commitment procedures for anyone acquitted only by reason of insanity. Under the present law, there is no Federal procedure for commitment to a mental institution—Federal officials can obtain civil commitment only by urging local authorities to institute such proceedings.

Tougher sentences, bail reform, and a crackdown on drug trafficking are most important legislative reforms. Other provisions which limit the insanity defense, combat the sexual exploitation of children, revise the laws dealing with criminal forfeiture, and authorize financial assistance to State and local law enforcement agencies are also necessary inclusions in this major reform legislation.

I am pleased that the Senate has approved this measure and remain confident that the House of Representatives will follow our lead. People throughout this country need to know that our criminal justice system is becoming strong again. There can be no law without order, and no order without law.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1983. This legislation is the product of lengthy and careful study by the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and Members of the Senate who have taken an active interest in improving the stucture of Federal laws for fighting crime. I am pleased to see that it has come to the Senate floor for action today, and I would like to speak about several of the bill's provisions which I believe are especially significant.

In the first place, I am proud and gratified that the language of the amendment which I sponsored on armor-piercing bullets in the last Congress has been adopted by the Judiciary Committee as part E of title X of the bill they reported for action. Armor-piercing handgun ammunition represents a serious threat against the lives of dedicated law enforcement officers. These deadly bullets defeat the protection of the soft body armor which is now being worn by more and more of our policemen, and which has helped save lives on many occasions. In Chicago, with great support from the general public, a major campaign is underway to raise the money needed so that every police officer can be equipped with this life-saving body armor. A similar effort is underway in the District of Columbia. These efforts could be rendered useless if we fail to take action to deter criminals from using ammunition that can penetrate the vests. Although the legislation I originally sponsored was much further reaching than the language contained in S. 1762, I believe that the tough mandatory penalties provided in the bill are an important first step. As we gain experience with the subject, we may find that further legislative measures are definitely in order. Furthermore, the States remain free to enact legislation at the State level providing penalties for illegal use of armor-piercing handgun bullets, or outlawing possession of them. What is important to me is that the Senate Judiciary Committee has taken the first step and the Senate as a whole will shortly take another, to removing or eliminating this potent threat to lives and well-being of thousands of law enforcement officials throughout our country. Truly, we owe it to them to make this improvement in our laws.

I am also pleased to see in the committee bill amendments to existing laws on child pornography which should greatly assist the Federal Government to combat the sexual exploitation of children. It is perfectly clear to me that the children who become involved with child pornography suffer harm. Without question, their lives can be warped or scarred by the experiences they have. Last July, the Supreme Court removed one of the obstacles that confronted our efforts to crack down on this illicit industry by holding that when children are involved, States can restrict even nonobscene materials because of the State's profound interest in protecting the physiological, emotional, and mental health of children. I think it is a tribute to the original sponsors of this legislation—and I am proud to have cosponsored the original bill in the form it passed the Senate last year—that they have moved so swiftly to bring the Federal statutes up to date with the latest determinations of the Supreme Court.

The bill also expands the scope of Federal laws against the robbery or burglary of a pharmacy in which a controlled substance is taken. Controlled substances, of course, are regulated by the Federal Government. Criminal penalties are provided for certain violations of the controlled substances statutes but, for years, no similar Federal penalties have applied to robberies or burglaries of pharmacies. Recognizing that State and local law enforcement agencies retain a vital role in the investigation and prosecution of such crimes, I nonetheless believe that an expanded Federal effort is warranted. I certainly hope that putting a new series of penalties in place, and expanding the mandate of Federal law enforcement agencies to cooperate in combating such crimes, will create a strong and effective deterrent.

Mr. President, I also believe that in the years that have passed since Federal criminal laws to deal with drug trafficking were enacted, the situation has changed drastically. Illegal drug transactions used to be relatively small. Federal law enforcement agencies are now faced with a very tough struggle to hold down the massive increase in both the volume of drugs imported into this country, and the serious crimes that are associated with that increase. The dollar volume of illegal drug trafficking has grown geometrically. The revisions in this bill to augment the penalties in this area are greatly needed. Where the profits from a single illegal deal can easily reach hundreds of thousands of dollars, it is important that the penalties, too, be in that range. Otherwise, Federal laws will allow drug dealers to pocket the difference between fines that are far too lenient, and often are not collected, and profits which have become frighteningly high.

Mr. President, I believe that the Federal Government should have better tools to carry the war on crime to the criminals. I think one of the best possible ways of doing this is to provide the Government with authority to seize property that has been acquired with the proceeds of illegal dealing. Today, when a drug dealer buys a farm and a yacht and other luxurious goods, there is frequently little the Government can do to make him feel the weight of the law, even if a conviction is obtained. He simply sits through his sentence, and when he is once again at large, he is free to enjoy his ill-gotten gains. This bill would help to address that situation by expanding the forfeiture provisions in existing law, so that the Government could go after that farm, that yacht, and other things obtained with the proceeds of his illegal dealings.

Another important way to insure that narcotics crimes do not pay is to be sure that when a convicted narcotics offender is sentenced to a fine, that that fine is paid. Too often, criminals are walking away from these fines, without consequence. As you might imagine, drug dealers are especially adept at concealing their assets, hiring sophisticated defense counsel, and, in general, finding ways to avoid payment. The amendment which I introduced last fall, incorporating the Criminal Fine Collection Act of 1983, will toughen the statutes considerably to allow the Justice Department and the courts to deal with this problem.

It is vital that we make criminal enterprises less attractive, that we enact into law the authority the Government now needs to stem this tide of lawlessness. I think that the provisions we are considering today are an important move in the right direction.

In summary, Mr. President, I believe S. 1762 contains many provisions which will be of material help to the fight against crime in this country. I commend the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND, for his diligence and persistence in bringing this bill to the floor.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, let me first make it abundantly clear that I am unalterably opposed to the practice of any person secretly taping his or her telephone or personal conversations without the consent and approval of the other party. The recent incident where Mr. Wick of the USIA secretly taped telephone conversations with several people—including a U.S. Senator and several administration officials—cannot be justified and is intolerable.

However, the amendment before us today is woefully deficient, as the Justice Department has pointed out in a letter to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Senator THURMOND. The Justice Department raises serious questions about the effect of such restrictions on legitimate law enforcement operations. This may or may not be true. But we owe it to ourselves to examine these issues carefully. If ever there were a case where the thorough consideration of legislation is essential, this is it.

Before we rush to pass legislation that may well create more problems than it solves, let us take the time and do the job right. Rather than acting today, let us give the Judiciary Committee an opportunity to hold hearings and to draft a bill that addresses the problem on the basis of full information, taking into account the legal ramifications that exist.

For these reasons, I will vote "no" on the Metzenbaum amendment. However, I want to serve notice that I do not take this matter lightly. I believe prudence requires that we give the Judiciary Committee an opportunity to hold hearings and vote out appropriate legislation. At the same time, I do not want this matter forgotten. If this amendment is defeated and the Judiciary Committee then fails to come forward with its own bill during the course of this session, then it would be my intention to vote for a future amendment if it appears that is the only way to secure action.

With those thoughts in mind, I would urge my colleagues to vote "no" on this amendment to give the Judiciary Committee time to do its job. But I also urge the committee to schedule early hearings and to report legislation to outlaw the surreptitious taping of telephone and private conversations as quickly as possible.

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, in efforts to fairly judge those accused of crime, our judicial system is often overgenerous in being fair and impartial. Many times, it extends beyond commonsense and prudence. All too often we have seen judges hamstrung by technicalities and forced to disregard the most heinous crimes, or seemingly blinded to the great danger posed to society by a criminal as some judges pursue a personal "social" ideology that neglects the needs of society at large.

Last year there were more than 50 murders per day, and some 100 violent crimes every hour in America. This is not the kind of America we want, for ourselves, or for our children.

The crime rate has decreased a fraction, but we still have a long way to go before Americans can once again feel safe on our streets and in our homes. We can take a major stride in making our streets and homes safer by passing the Comprehensive Crime Control Act, S. 1660, which is now before this body.

By passing this legislation, we can, for the first time, allow judges to deny bail to a defendant on the basis that his release would pose a threat to the community. S. 1762 would limit parole and require more uniform sentences. We could also take millions of dollars of revenue away from organized crime with the package's increased penalties for narcotic offenses.

Most of all, the package would address an inequity that has been of particular concern to my constituents—the insanity defense. They have been especially concerned about this loophole in the law since the shooting of the President and the serious wounding of Mr. James Brady, his press secretary. They are outraged that one who would murder can commit an act such as this, and not face harsh judgment.

The Hinckley trial only coalesced popular dissatisfaction with our arcane legal system. This dissatisfaction has been building for years with increasing reports of psychopathic killers being set free after a few years or even months of easy times in mental institutions.

Who among us in society, in the universities, in the laboratories, in the clinics, holds a degree so worthy, or commands knowledge so penetrating, that he knows whether or not a killer will kill again? If we took such risks with a new chemical food additive or airplane design, the public would revolt. Frankly, they would be right in doing so.

Once a human being has demonstrated that he is so deranged as to wantonly take a life or lives, who among us is so insightful as to determine that the killer's return to society is an acceptable risk? The insanity defense, in the way it is structured today, places that burden on society in an unfair manner.

The legislation I am supporting changes the law by minimizing the use of the insanity plea, placing the burden of proof on the defendant and not on the prosecutor. The insanity plea is inimical to justice because it negates the principles of guilt and responsibility.

The Comprehensive Crime Control Act addresses many of the problems and inequities in our Criminal Code. Law, to be effective, must respected. And in numerous cases, our legal system today is not respected because it often has no correlation to commonsense.

A recent court decision emphasizes my point. Authorities at the San Diego airport, through a trained police dog at the Fort Lauderdale airport, traced a traveling suspect's suitcase. Inside the suitcase, officials found several pounds of illegal narcotics. The drug smuggler was arrested, prosecuted and convicted. However, the defendant's lawyers appealed the conviction to the Ninth Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals. The appeals court ruled that the police dog had violated the suspect's rights by sniffing his luggage.

The effect of the ruling in this case seems to insure the suspect's right to smuggle narcotics. This example exemplifies the distorted priorities of today's American criminal justice system. Rather than being solicitious of the protection of society from murderers, rapists, drug smugglers and the like, the courts engage in judicial gymnastics to protect criminals from law enforcement agencies.

To be sure, we have to have a body of laws that protects the accused from the whims of popular opinion. But in doing so, the courts have often overcorrected—disconnecting criminal law from any semblance of basic justice or common wisdom.

Any body of law that long ignores the needs of victims or society is a system that invites disrespect. To keep respect for the law, we must uphold the standards of justice, and to do that Congress must enact the Comprehensive Crime Control Act this year.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we face a serious problem of crime in America, and there is an urgent need for effective leadership by the Federal Government.

Although major crime indicators are showing a slight decrease, the staggering figures that remain are unacceptably high. Each year, more than 25,000 Americans are killed by violent criminals. In Massachusetts, for example, every 16 minutes another innocent citizen falls victim to a violent crime.

Americans believe that security in our homes and neighborhoods is as important as international security.

The bill which the Senate approved today is a major anticrime package containing essential reforms with widespread bipartisan support.

In my view, the most important provisions in this legislation relate to sentencing and bail—the two areas where reform is most overdue. The bill replaces our haphazard approach to sentencing with a new system which establishes a commission to develop sentencing guidelines for judges, abolishes parole, and provides for appellate review of sentences. The sentencing provisions of this bill are identical to those in S. 668, which I introduced earlier this year. S. 668 has been reported to the Senate, and will be acted on shortly.

With respect to bail, the crime package for the first time allows judges to consider the dangerousness of a defendant in determining whether and under what conditions to permit release on bail.

The bill provides important weapons againt drug trafficking and organized crime through stiffer penalties and stronger forfeiture statutes. The bill also provides procedures to deal with violent juvenile offenders. Finally, it gives desperately needed Federal assistance to State and local prosecutors.

This legislation embodies a unique consensus that has been developing in the Senate to achieve reforms needed to wage a successful war on crime. It excludes controversial proposals to limit the exclusionary rule and habeas corpus, and to reinstate the death penalty. Judiciary Committee Senators in both parties know that we cannot enact effective anticrime legislation unless we separate these divisive issues from the major effort.

The continued bipartisan cooperation that has brought us to this point is an unusual achievement for which many Senators deserve great credit. The measure before us is proof that Congress can adopt significant anticrime legislation, without jeopardizing the constitutional rights or the civil liberties of any citizen.

Approval of this measure today is a significant step forward in or continuing war against crime.

● Mr. LAXALT. Mr. President, to protect innocent citizens from the depredations of others is the highest duty of Government. The bill that we have passed today contains a great many measures that enable the Federal Government to combat crime more effectively, and therefore, I fervently hope that S. 1762 will be approved by the House and signed into law in short order. I realize that over these last several days of debate, we have touched on many of the bill's most significant provisions, and I do not intend now to catalog again all of the major advances that this legislation makes possible. Suffice it to say that it should help enormously to restore public confidence in America's criminal law system.

The Comprehensive Crime Control Act goes far toward helping our criminal justice system actually dispense justice. When this bill becomes law, Congress will have acted for the first time in history to define the Federal insanity defense; we will have limited that defense and brought some commonsense to the issue. When this bill becomes law, Federal judges will once again be able to take danger to the community into account in setting bail. When this bill becomes law, society can be more certain that convicted criminals will receive just jail sentences. The forfeiture, drug enforcement, and labor racketeering reforms that we have passed are also essential to a properly functioning system of justice.

Passage of this bill is indeed a singular accomplishment. I want to express my great appreciation for the extraordinary effort put into this legislation by a great many Senators on both sides of the aisle. My special gratitude goes to Senator THURMOND, distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who shouldered the enormous task of shepherding this bill to passage. I also thank Senators BIDEN and KENNEDY, who were instrumental in this terribly important endeavor. The Department of Justice, which worked so hard in helping to assemble the administration's anticrime package, should be greatly commended as well.●

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I want to commend the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee and the entire committee for bringing this bill before the Senate.

I supported this legislation when it came before the Senate in 1982, and I have cosponsored legislation this session dealing with child pornography, bail reform, insanity defense, and drug trafficking, which are basically included in this bill.

We now have before us a composition piece of legislation that has been almost a decade in the making—it deserves the support of the Senate.

Americans expect their Congress to provide laws that will do a better job in controlling crime. It is imperative that the Federal Government has the tools to be effective. As a former assistant U.S. attorney, I am familiar with the need for this important legislation, and I want the members of the committee to know that law enforcement agencies and American people will appreciate their efforts.

Mr. President, this is a fair bill, this is a bipartisan bill, this is needed legislation, and I urge its speedy approval.●

● Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, and, distinguished colleagues, I would like to take this opportunity to express my support of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1983. I would especially like to thank the distinguished Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and the committee members for their diligence in delivering this crime package. I believe that this legislation represents the urgent need for laws which protect society from those individuals who perpetrate conscienceless, senseless, and often brutal crimes on law-abiding citizens in our country.

It is with pleasure that I recognize the actions of the Judiciary Committee in reform legislation in the two areas of sentencing and drug enforcement which I have found to be severely inadequate in the past.

During the first session of the 98th Congress, I was prepared to submit an amendment to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure which would have required consecutive sentencing for an individual who committed a felony while on bail or released on personal recognizance for another offense. We should not tolerate criminals taking advantage of the shortcomings in our criminal justice system without suffering the consequences of their aberrant and hostile behavior.

I am pleased to note that with the cooperation of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, Mr. THURMOND, and my esteemed colleagues on the Judiciary Committee, it became unnecessary for me to submit my consecutive sentencing provision as an amendment. This crime package incorporates my proposal on consecutive sentencing which would mandate that a person who commits a felony or misdemeanor while on bail or released on personal recognizance for another offense, must be sentenced to a consecutive term of imprisonment.

I also commend the Judiciary Committee for its response to the need for corrective legislation in the area of controlled substances. I was prepared to offer an amendment that would have increased the penalties for trafficking in schedule I and II drugs, and by removing the distinction between narcotic and nonnarcotic drugs as they are presently defined in schedules I and II of the controlled substances act.

Once again, the committee understood the failings of our current laws with the illegal sale of drugs. This bill amends the Controlled Substances Act by increasing penalties for the trafficking in drugs specified in schedules I and II and, most importantly, removes the distinction between narcotic and nonnarcotic drugs that currently prevents effective punitive sanctions from being placed on drug traffickers.

Criminals are now on notice that society will no longer tolerate their callous disregard of our criminal justice system and allow leniency to be shown where no leniency is deserved due to shortcomings in our criminal laws. It is gratifying to know that my efforts to correct the abuses of our criminal justice system have been recognized in the Crime Control Act.●

TOUGH CRIMINAL REFORM LEGISLATION NEEDED

● Mr. JEPSEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of S. 1762, the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1983. I must say this legislation is long overdue.

As you know, Congress passed similar legislation during the 97th Congress but due to some differences of opinion over a number of controversial issues, that legislation was vetoed.

I believe that the bill before us today enjoys the support of the administration and, if passed by the House, would be signed into law.

Some of the issues addressed in this bill are: Sentencing reform; bail reform; assault on Federal officials; murder-for-hire; bank bribery; bank fraud; and mandatory penalties for use of fire arm.

This is by no means a complete list of the many issues dealt with in this bill. But, I think it does give you an idea of some of the serious topics that we are dealing with.

There is no question, Mr. President, that there is strong support for increased enforcement and increased penalties for crimes and criminals.

Poll after poll shows that the American people place fear of crime at the top of the list of things that concern them the most.

To say that this legislation has been a long time in coming, Mr. President, is an understatement. In some cases, these issues have been debated by successive Congress for the past 20 years.

I commend the Judiciary Committee, both the majority and minority members, for this major effort.

Mr. President, I am questioned by Iowans on a regular basis when I am back home and this most recent time away from Washington is no exception.

Very often during these meetings I am asked why it is that the criminal justice system seems more interested in protecting the rights of the criminal rather than the rights of the victim.

Indeed, some have suggested that our system of criminal justice is aptly named because it is only concerned about the rights of criminals.

Unfortunately, this is often an accurate assessment of our legal system.

While S. 1762 does not go as far in protecting victim's rights as I might like, I would say that it goes a long way toward bringing some semblance of sanity to the system.

Of particular importance in this area is the section of the bill dealing with sentencing reform.

As anyone who has closely examined Federal sentencing procedures knows, there is often very little consistency on the part of Federal judges.

It is hard for anyone to accept the notion that a crime might be more heinous in one part of the country than another despite the fact that the circumstances surrounding the particular cases are identical.

It is not hard to find situations where individuals convicted of drug possession might receive a very light sentence in one court while another person convicted of the same offense receives a very tough sentence in another court.

The sentencing reform provision cannot guarantee that this will never occur again but it goes a long way toward bringing a great deal of consistency to Federal sentencing procedures.

One final note, Mr. President. I would like to take this opportunity to strongly urge the Judiciary Committee to take a serious look at victims' rights legislation.

As you know, many States have already enacted various forms of victims' rights legislation and early studies indicate that it is working quite well.

In many cases, these victims' rights laws establish compensation funds within a State from which victims can be compensated for their losses. The money in these funds comes from the criminals.

Although I realize that trying to establish something like this on a national level might be a monumental undertaking, I still believe it is worth a try.

I urge my colleagues to support S. 1762. It is legislation that is long overdue and the people of America have strongly indicated their support for efforts such as this.●

PROVISIONS TO UTILIZE SURPLUS PROPERTY IN PRISON CONSTRUCTION

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am pleased to see incorporated within title VII, a provision that I introduced in the 97th Congress, S. 1422. That bill passed the Senate unanimously in that Congress but was not acted upon by the House. This year I again introduced this provision, currently numbered S. 329. This legislation authorizes the donation of surplus property to any State for the construction of criminal justice facilities and incorporates one of the recommendations of the President's Task Force on Violent Crime.

Prison overcrowding is a problem which we can no longer overlook. It is a problem which goes beyond corrections. Potentially, it leads to a circumvention of the overall public and criminal justice system. Probation is meted out instead of incarceration because judges are aware that there is no available prison space. At a time when we are leaning toward harsher, longer prison sentences, available prison space is indispensable.

It is no secret that States are currently faced with the question of how to eliminate overcrowding in prisons so as to fashion programs that rise to constitutionally acceptable levels of legality and humanity. Society cannot permit crime to go unpunished for want of prison space, and for the present, prison is the only sanction available for violent crime. A revolutionary breakthrough in the range of available rehabilitative sanctions is not on the horizon. Again, I applaud the inclusion of this important provision in the comprehensive crime control package and urge all of my colleagues to support its enactment.

ARSON AMENDMENTS TO THE CRIME CONTROL ACT

Mr. President, I have the privilege of being the author of another section of the Crime Control Act. Part "N" of title 10 of this bill is the Public Safety Officer's Protection Act.

This provision makes clear the intent of the Congress that the enhanced penalty sections of the Federal arson laws apply whenever a fireman or police officer are injured while fighting a fire set by an arsonist. Already Federal law doubles the maximum penalty from 10 to 20 years whenever a person is injured by a fire set by an arsonist. That law allows the court to impose any penalty, including the death penalty if someone is killed in the blaze. It may amaze my colleagues that at least one Federal court has held that this enhanced penalty section of 18 U.S.C. 844 did not apply when the dead and injured were firemen performing their duties.

As a result, the arsonists were convicted and sentenced as though all that they had done was destroy a place of business. No mention was made of the fact that two courageous firefighters in Sioux City, Iowa lost their lives as a result of the arsonists' conduct, and that six others were injured.

Mr. President, I believe that Congress intended public safety officers as well as the public at large to be protected by the enhanced penalty provisions. Apparently, however, we did not make our intent clear enough and that is the purpose of this legislation. I urge my colleagues to adopt it without modification.

PHARMACY ROBBERY LEGISLATION

Mr. President, I am delighted that the Senate has now turned its attention to our Nation's crime problem. I have the privilege of having authored several provisions of S. 1762 and I would like to discuss these provisions at this time.

One important provision of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1983 is contained in title 10, part O of S. 1762. This provision makes it a Federal crime to rob or burglarize a pharmacy or federally registered warehouse its drugs.

Mr. President, this Congress and administration have devoted a major part of their work to disrupting the flow of illegal drugs into our country where they poison, primarily our young people. One of the unintended effects of these efforts has been an increase in the number of robberies and burglaries of pharmacies and pharmaceutical warehouses.

We often fail to realize the depth of the problem of diversion of drugs from legal to illegal sources. Between 1978 and 1982, there were 516 incidents of robbery and burglary against pharmacies, according to American Druggist magazine. In recent years, we have witnessed an annual increase in the number of armed robberies at pharmacies at an annual rate of over 150 percent.

Of often neglected significance is the additional cost on society of the illegally diverted drug. The narcotics traffic value of pharmaceuticals diverted from legal sources is even more astounding. At one recent warehouse burglary, the wholesale value of the controlled substances stolen was a mere $16,500. But State police estimated the street value to be as high as $1,200,000. When one measures the social cost of this crime as the amount of property stolen to obtain the money needed to purchase the diverted drugs illegally, the problem becomes even more apparent. Assuming that only one-half of the diverted drugs were with stolen money or the fruits of stolen property, the social cost to the Nation for this one crime was as high as $4,600,000. Now imagine, if you will, what the cost to the Nation was for the total of those 516 crimes occurring between 1978 and 1982 and I believe that you will have an indication of the seriousness of this problem.

As other Federal and State drug-interdiction programs take hold and have an impact, the incidence of this crime seems likely to increase. Already some 40 percent of pharmacists have stopped stocking certain types of drugs that are targets of thefts, according to one survey. In our major cities, delivery services have all but stopped and the kid on the bicycle delivering drugs for the neighborhood pharmacy is a thing of the past. This finding has serious implications for the legal drug distribution system. Over 12 percent of the pharmacists in the survey now keep a gun in the pharmacy and 11 percent have shortened their hours. In many ways, a seige mentality has taken hold at the Nation's legal drug distribution outlets.

Neither is this crime contained to our urban centers alone. In the last Congress, my good friend and colleague Senator JEPSEN brought us an example of a pharmacist in Blue Ridge, Ga., who had been robbed 10 times in 4 years. Clearly, a Federal attack on the drug diversion that occurs when a pharmacy is robbed or burglarized is an important link in any chain of crime and drug-crime control legislation.

PROVISIONS TO COMBAT CHILD PORNOGRAPHY—TITLE XI

Mr. President, at this time I wish to lend my strong endorsement to the provisions of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act dealing with child pornography. It is heartening to see this bill adopts the provisions of S. 1469, a bill that significantly strengthens Federal efforts to eradicate child pornography.

Due to the outstanding efforts of Senators LAXALT, SPECTER, DENTON and, of course, the distinguished chairman, STROM THURMOND, we have before us a provision that shields as effectively as possible those children vulnerable to sexual exploitation. This measure was agreed to after much deliberation as to what standards would both protect children and pass constitutional muster.

Taking its lead from the Supreme Court's 1982 decision in New York against Ferber, these provisions outlaw the distribution of all child pornography—not simply that which is technically obscene. The Court recognized in Ferber that the need to protect our children from sexual exploitation far outweighed the need of the exploiters to first amendment protection, and the bill before us writes that conclusion into law.

Currently, we are involved in resolving some of the differences between the House and Senate versions of child pornography legislation. And I, like the distinguished chairman of the Juvenile Justice Subcommittee, Senator ARLEN SPECTER, look forward to a quick resolution of these differences so that we might get this tool into the United States Code as quickly as possible.

All of us recognize that this bill marks only the beginning of heightened efforts to abolish child pornography. The true test of its effectiveness remains in the hands of our Federal prosecutors. Let us hope that through this legislation we will have armed them adequately.●

● Mr. MATTINGLY. Mr. President, I rise today in support of this long overdue reform of the criminal justice system and to commend my colleagues on the Judciary Committee for their tireless work on this bipartisan package. It is my view, and I believe that of a great many citizens of this Nation, that the Comprehensive Crime Control Act is one of the most important measures the Senate will consider during this Congress. There is nothing so deserving of the attention of this body as the protection of our Nation's citizens and there is nothing that places them in more real jeopardy, on a daily basis throughout this land, than the rising tide of crime. I believe Senate bill 1762 will provide a mechanism for stemming that tide.

In conversations with my fellow citizens I find an underlying sense of frustration that our current laws seem to protect the rights of criminals at the expense of victims and other law-abiding citizens; or that our criminal justice system is arbitrary, and that the penalty for a crime depends as much upon the sentencing judge as it does on the offense itself. Like the numbers of Georgians from whom I have heard, I believe that restoring respect for the law should be a national priority. And if we are to be successful at this, criminals must know that they will be swiftly tried and surely punished.

Title II of Senate bill 1762 goes far toward achieving that goal. By establishing a determinate sentencing system and promoting uniform sentencing, it seeks to remove the uncertainty, and I would add injustice, which currently prevails. The present system is one that one of our colleagues has aptly termed "roulette." But sentencing is not a game, despite the fact that criminals who now are willing to stake a chance on appearing before a lenient judge may believe it to be. Uniform sentencing will go far to remedy this problem.

I am particularly pleased that the committee has included extensive bail reform provisions in the legislation. The provision allowing the courts to consider the danger to the community in making bail determinations is, in my view, long overdue. The safety of the community should be of primary concern to lawmakers, law enforcement officials, and the courts. History is only too full of gruesome accounts of heinous crimes committed by felons released on bail.

The current insanity defense has often made a mockery of our criminal justice system. Most recently, John Hinckley loudly and tragically drove that point home. I am pleased to see revisions in the insanity defense which place the burden of proof on the defendant and which provide for Federal commitment of persons found guilty by reason of insanity.

Mr. President, perhaps the most dangerous criminal this Nation faces is the illegal drug trafficker. Illegal drugs increase the number of accidents and suicides among youths, contribute to other crimes, rip apart the lives of friends and families, and even of whole communities. My wife, Carolyn, has been particularly active in drawing attention to the widespread problem of drug abuse in this Nation. We are all victims of it, and we cannot adequately protect ourselves and our children until we can remove the source of illegal drugs themselves. Stronger Federal penalties for narcotic offenses, I believe, will serve as a much-needed deterrent.

I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this bill, and in sending a loud signal to the criminal element in this country and the world that America is tough on crime and that the Senate of the United States is serious about protecting the well-being of our citizens.●

I. BAIL REFORM

● Mr. LAXALT. Mr President, the bail reform proposal in this crime package will permit Federal courts to consider the danger the defendant poses to the community as a factor in decisions on pretrial release. Present law authorizes the courts to place conditions on pretrial release only for the purpose of assuring the defendant's presence at trial. As a result of this limitation, current law is too liberal in allowing release of defendants and too inflexible when it comes to permitting the judges to fashion reasonable conditions for the release of particular individuals.

In particular, current Federal law does not give courts the authority to impose conditions of release that are geared toward assuring community safety, yet, recent studies have shown that a significant number of persons are rearrested for other crimes while they are released on bail. The proposed reform provides this authority and, where necessary, the authority to deny release altogether to individuals who pose especially grave risks to the safety of the community. By "safety of the community" the committee means more than merely the danger of harm involving personal physical violence: Harms such as corrupting unions, drug trafficking, and continued acts of theft are included in this concept of community safety.

The major criticism that has been made of the bill is that it permits pretrial detention of dangerous individuals even though studies have shown that future criminal behavior cannot be accurately predicted. There are, I believe, three responses to this charge. First, present law requires the judges to fix bail amounts that are based upon predictions of the defendant's likelihood of future appearance at trial, yet there is no evidence that judges are more able to make this prediction better than they can predict future criminal behavior. Defendants in capital cases, of course, are presently not eligible for pretrial release, and it is clear that release on bail is not an absolute, constitutional right.

Second, the courts are covertly making these determinations already. When faced with a clearly dangerous defendant, judges often impose a high money bond for the ostensible purpose of assuring appearance but not for the actual purpose of protecting the public. The proposed reform makes this subterfuge unnecessary and will promote candor and effectiveness by permitting the court to request evidence for the express purpose of determining whether the defendant should be detained before trial in order to protect the public safety.

Third, the bill provides Federal judges with a broad range of options for their decisions regarding pretrial release. The judge may first, release a defendant on his own recognizance or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond; or second, release him subject to conditions listed in the bill; or third, detain the defendant temporarily if the defendant is already on conditional release; or fourth, detain the person until trial.

The decision to detain the defendant before trial is not an automatic one: In order to detain the defendant before trial, a hearing must be held and the judicial officer must specifically find that no release condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person and the safety of any other person and the community. Thus, the bill provides the basis for making the most reasonable, defensible decision on whether an individual should be released before trial. While no statutory scheme can guarantee 100 percent accuracy in predicting future criminal behavior, that failure is no reason to preclude the reasonable, commonsense precaution of denying to obviously dangerous individuals the freedom to commit more crimes while awaiting trial.

The bill is sound in purpose and design. It should be approved without amendment.

II. SENTENCING REFORM

Mr. President, criminal sentencing in the Federal courts today is marked by two serious defects: first, the sentences imposed upon similarly situated defendants vary widely from district to district, and from judge to judge. Second, when a defendant is sentenced to a term of imprisonment, no one—not the judge, the defendant, the Parole Commission, nor the public—is ever certain of just how much time the individual will serve. The sentencing reform title of S. 1762 focuses on these problems and provides a solution.

It addresses the problem of disparity in sentencing by establishing a sentencing commission that will promulgate sentencing guidelines for the Federal judges. In cases where imprisonment is appropriate, the guidelines will prescribe a narrow range of sentences for defendants with particular offender and offense characteristics. A judge will be able to sentence a defendant outside of the prescribed range, but if the sentence exceeds the guideline, the defendant may appeal on the ground that the sentence is unreasonable; if the sentence is lower than the guideline, the Government may appeal. Thus, judges will finally have guidance in their sentencing decisions, and the defendants and prosecutors will have a means to assure greater consistency of sentences throughout the Nation's Federal courts.

The proposal also addresses the problem of sentencing uncertainty by establishing a system of determinate sentencing and by abolishing parole and phasing out the U.S. Parole Commission over a 5-year period. No longer will a judge sentence a defendant to prison 1 day only to have the Parole Commission later set the actual release date, a date which, however, is then subject to continual changes by the Commission and the Bureau of Prisons. Under the sentencing reform proposal, the sentence imposed by the judge will be the sentence to be served by the defendant, subject only to the possibility of 10 percent good time or early release based upon the conduct of the prisoner within the Federal prison system. This good-time provision is a necessary device to control the behavior of prisoners.

In addition to offering these well-considered responses to the problems of disparity and uncertainty, the bill also contains a series of directives to the sentencing commission in the creation of the guidelines. The bill requires the Commission to specify stiff prison terms for those who commit violent crimes, drug offenses, and other serious crimes. On the other hand, the Commission is directed to insure that first offenders of less serious crimes be considered for alternative forms of punishment, rather than imprisonment. The bill does not alter the existing maximum terms of imprisonment set out in the statutes, but it does substitute realistic fine levels for the present, obsolete maximums. The maximum fine level is raised to $250,000 in felony cases and in cases of misdemeanors that result in loss of human life and raises the maximum fine level for all other misdemeanors to $25,000.

All in all, title II affords several much-needed changes in Federal sentencing law. The bill is the result of more than 10 years of hard work and legislative debate. This reform merits the support of all Members of the Senate.

III. FORFEITURE

Mr. President, the forfeiture provisions of S. 1762 are intended to improve civil and criminal forfeiture proceedings so that Federal prosecutors can make effective use of this weapon in the war against racketeering and drug trafficking. Forfeiture proceedings permit law enforcement officials to cripple and not merely wound racketeers and drug dealers by seizing the proceeds of their criminal organizations. However, current Federal statutes and case law impede Federal prosecutors from taking full advantage of civil and criminal forfeiture in these categories of cases. The forfeiture provisions address these problems of current law.

In particular, title III clarifies present law regarding the forfeitability of racketerring proceeds under the RICO statute. The bill provides new authority permitting preindictment restraining orders for the purpose of preventing suspects who know they are under investigation from eluding forfeiture by getting rid of their tainted assets before they are actually named as defendants. And it also authorizes courts to order a defendant to forfeit substitute assets when his forfeitable property has been made unavailable at the time of conviction.

Title III extends criminal forfeiture to all Federal felony drug cases and amends the existing civil forfeiture statutes to permit the seizing of real property in certain drug cases.

Finally, in addition to other clarification and adjustments of present statutes, the bill expands the availability of efficient administrative forfeiture proceedings in uncontested cases and sets up, under trial programs, special funding mechanisms to meet the expenses associated with seizures and forfeitures by the Federal justice and customs authorities.

These amendments do not greatly expand the scope of property subject to forfeiture. Rather, they primarily adjust present law to overcome problems arising from ambiguity and unnecessary limitations that now exist. Forfeiture is a powerful weapon in the arsenal of prosecutors; accordingly, the bill takes special care to safeguard the rights of third parties and of defendants subject to forfeiture proceedings. I believe the proposals strike a proper balance between individual rights and the need of society to eliminate organized racketeering and drug trafficking.

V. DRUG ENFORCEMENT AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, the drug enforcement amendments improve the penalty structure for major drug trafficking offenses and improve regulatory authority regarding controlled substances.

Present law, the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Protection and Control Act of 1970, makes penalties for major drug trafficking offenses—except marijuana offenses—depend solely on the nature of the controlled substance involved in the offense. Title V makes the amount of the drug a factor as well. This permits the courts to impose the more severe penalties that are appropriate in cases involving large amounts of drugs. Title V also boosts present fine levels to more realistic amounts and eliminates the unnecessary distinction between narcotic and nonnarcotic drugs for the purpose of sentencing. These three changes will provide a set of tough and consistent penalties for the drug offenses that constitute one of the most serious crime problems facing our country.

Part B of the title focuses on the Government's authority to regulate the diversions controlled substances of legitimate origin into the illicit market. Recent studies indicate that as many as 60 to 70 percent of the drugrelated deaths and injuries in our country involve drugs that are originally part of the legitimate production and distribution chain.

Current law—the Controlled Substances Act of 1970—provides necessary regulation of manufacturers and distributors, but it does not adequately cover the practitioner level of the distribution chain, the level at which 80 to 90 percent of current diversion of drugs into illicit markets takes place.

Title V responds to the problems of diversion control under current law by providing several significant improvements. First, it expands the standards for practitioner registration beyond the current exclusive reliance upon authorization by the practitioner's own jurisdiction. At the same time, title V removes the unnecessary burden of mandatory annual registration by permitting the Attorney General to extend the registration period up to 3 years. Current time-consuming scheduling procedures have been amended to provide swift, emergency scheduling of dangerous drugs. And the bill provides new grant authority for the expansion of assistance to States for curtailing practitioner diversion.

These drug enforcement amendments are at the heart of the administration's efforts to combat drug-related crime. The amendments improve existing law and make possible harsher, more appropriate penalties for major drug offenders. The bill merits the approval of the Senate.

VII. SURPLUS PROPERTY AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, the present crisis in prison overcrowding is equal in magnitude to any of the crime problems addressed by this bill. Once all of the gaps in the criminal law are plugged and the prosecutors and law enforcement officers are fully equipped to win the war on crime, what do we do with the convicts? Certainly, as enlightened policymakers, we must place more emphasis in the use of alternatives to imprisonment in sentencing, and the directives to the Sentencing Commission in title II of this bill provide just that emphasis. Yet, we are still left with several hundred thousand criminals for whom imprisonment is the most appropriate penalty, not just because their conduct merits harsh retribution, but because the public safety requires these individuals to be isolated from the rest of us.

At present, prison population growth far exceeds the rate of prison construction and the rate of population growth in general; 90 percent of these criminals are imprisoned in State facilities. Over 40 percent of all prisoners are housed in jails and prisons that were built before 1925. The cost of prison construction and prison expansion is enormous—maximum security facilities run between $75,000 and $95,000 per cell and medium security cells average between $50,000 and $60,000 apiece.

Most States are under Federal court order to reduce overcrowding, and in practice this has meant that dangerous criminals are set free after serving less time than the courts, the public, and the victims believe appropriate.

Title VII offers help to the States in responding to this problem. Under present law, surplus Federal properties may be leased or donated to the States at little or no cost for certain purposes. The use of such properties for correctional facilities is not one of these statutory purposes. Therefore, title VII adds correctional facilities to the list of public benefit disposals for surplus Federal property and authorizes the Administrator of the GSA to donate such property to States and local governments for correctional uses upon the recommendation of the Attorney General.

The cost to the Federal Government is negligible. The aid to the States is necessary and significant. This title is worthy of immediate approval by the Congress so that the crisis in our prisons can be effectively resolved.

VIII. LABOR RACKETEERING AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, the labor racketeering amendments (title VIII) of S. 1762 are designed to provide unions and employee benefit plans greater protection from corrupt union and management officials. The amendments increase the penalties for violating portions of three statutes—ERISA, the Taft-Hartley Act, and the Landrum-Griffin Act—by making these violating felonies punishable by fines of up to $15,000 and prison terms of up to 5-years, or both.

The amendments expand the lists of crimes in ERISA and Landrum-Griffin that disqualify individuals from holding responsible positions in employee benefit plans and in unions. Further, the maximum period of disqualification is increased to 10 years.

Finally, the amendments clarify the elements of the crimes of buying and selling of labor peace in Taft-Hartley by adding the element that the proscribed conduct be "with intent to benefit himself or to benefit other persons whom he knows are not permitted to receive such payment, loan, money, or other thing of value under subsection 302 (c)(4) through (c)(9)." This clarification restricts the criminal sanctions to those who properly merit them, while present law sometimes applies to individuals who act in the good faith belief that their conduct falls within one of the technical exceptions listed in section 302. In short, title VIII offers greater protection to the employees who contribute to benefit plans and who are members of unions and also to the officials who are confronted with a complicated set of restrictions in their daily work.

The amendments in title VIII have already been approved by the Senate in S. 336. Because these amendments provide important tools in combating organized crime, one of the two main targets of S. 1762, it is appropriate to include the provisions of S. 336 in this comprehensive crime package as well.

IX. CURRENCY AND FOREIGN TRANSACTIONS REPORTING ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, title IX of S. 1762 gets at one of the most important elements of current drug trafficking and organized crime—the laundering of illicit proceeds by concealing the money in foreign countries with strict banksecrecy laws. The Currency and Foreign Transactions Reporting Act of 1982 is a useful device to inhibit money laundering through foreign banks, but problems have already surfaced with the law. This title is intended to close the loopholes that favor the drug traffickers and criminal organizations the act was intended to affect.

In particular, title IX increases the penalties for failure to report the international movement of money from the current maximums of 1 year and $1,000 to 5 years and $5,000. At the same time, the amendments raise the reporting threshold from $5,000 to $10,000 in order to focus on large transactions and to relieve the legitimate international traveler who goes abroad with amounts of between $5,000 and $10,000 of the burden of paperwork imposed by the reporting requirement.

The most misunderstood part of the proposal is the provision authorizing customs officers to conduct warrantless searches of individuals and property "with respect to which the officer has reasonable cause to believe there is a monetary instrument being transported" in violation of the reporting requirements. Present statutes require warrants for these searches, but the case law regarding warrantless border searches under the fourth amendment indicates that such searches are constitutional even without warrants or probable cause. The normal factual situation is one in which customs officers at international airports are faced with a very limited period of time to act upon their reasonable suspicion that an individual is violating the statute. It is reasonable and constitutional to authorize searches without warrants in such situations in order to respond to a major problem posed by organized and drug-related crime.

Finally, title IX expands the reporting requirement to apply to a person who knowingly attempts to transport or have transported money under circumstances otherwise requiring a report. The criminal attempt provision is proposed in order to respond to problems posed by the interpretations of the present statute. Recent cases require customs officers to wait until the individual is on the verge of boarding the plane or taking off before the elements of the offense are satisfied.

As you can see, this title, which, I might add, passed this Senate last year as part of S. 2572 and which has been introduced again this Congress by Senator ROTH as a separate bill, proposes reasonable, commonsense changes designed to make the existing law better accomplish its purpose. I urge wholehearted support by the Senate of title IX.●

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask for third reading of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPECTER). Are there any further amendments to be proposed? If there are no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ARMSTRONG) and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

So the bill (S. 1762) as amended, was passed as follows:

S. 1762

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984".

TITLE I—BAIL

SEC. 101. This title may be cited as the "Bail Reform Act of 1984".

SEC. 102. (a) Sections 3141 through 3151 of title 18, United States Code, are repealed and the following new sections are inserted in lieu thereof:

"§ 3141. Release and detention authority generally

"(a) PENDING TRIAL.—A judicial officer who is authorized to order the arrest of a person pursuant to section 3041 of this title shall order that an arrested person who is brought before him be released or detained, pending judicial proceedings, pursuant to the provisions of this chapter.

"(b) PENDING SENTENCE OR APPEAL.—A judicial officer of a court of original jurisdiction over an offense, or a judicial officer of a Federal appellate court, shall order that, pending imposition or execution of sentence, or pending appeal of conviction or sentence, a person be released or detained pursuant to the provisions of this chapter.

"§ 3142. Release or detention of a defendant pending trial

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon the appearance before a judicial officer of a person charged with an offense, the judicial officer shall issue an order that, pending trial, the person be—

"(1) released on his personal recognizance or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond, pursuant to the provisions of subsection (b);

"(2) released on a condition or combination of conditions pursuant to the provisions of subsection (c);

"(3) temporarily detained to permit revocation of conditional release, deportation, or exclusion pursuant to the provisions of subsection (d); or

"(4) detained pursuant to the provisions of subsection (e).

"(b) RELEASE ON PERSONAL RECOGNIZANCE OR UNSECURED APPEARANCE BOND.—The judicial officer shall order the pretrial release of the person on his personal recognizance, or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond in an amount specified by the court, subject to the condition that the person not commit a Federal, State, or local crime during the period of his release, unless the judicial officer determines that such release will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required or will endanger the safety of any other person or the community.

"(c) RELEASE ON CONDITIONS.—If the judicial officer determines that the release described in subsection (b) will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required or will endanger the safety of any other person or the community, he shall order the pretrial release of the person—

"(1) subject to the condition that the person not commit a Federal, State, or local crime during the period of release; and

"(2) subject to the least restrictive further condition, or combination of conditions, that he determines will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community, which may include the condition that the person—

"(A) remain in the custody of a designated person, who agrees to supervise him and to report any violation of a release condition to the court, if the designated person is able reasonably to assure the judicial officer that the person will appear as required and will not pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community;

"(B) maintain employment, or, if unemployed, actively seek employment;

"(C) maintain or commence an educational program;

"(D) abide by specified restrictions on his personal associations, place of abode, or travel;

"(E) avoid all contact with an alleged victim of the crime and with a potential witness who may testify concerning the offense;

"(F) report on a regular basis to a designated law enforcement agency, pretrial services agency, or other agency;

"(G) comply with a specified curfew;

"(H) refrain from possessing a firearm, destructive device, or other dangerous weapon;

"(I) refrain from excessive use of alcohol, or any use of a narcotic drug or other controlled substance, as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802), without a prescription by a licensed medical practitioner;

"(J) undergo available medical or psychiatric treatment, including treatment for drug or alcohol dependency, and remain in a specified institution if required for that purpose;

"(K) execute an agreement to forfeit upon failing to appear as required, such designated property, including money, as is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person as required, and post with the court such indicia of ownership of the property or such percentage of the money as the judicial officer may specify;

"(L) execute a bail bond with solvent sureties in such amount as is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person as required;

"(M) return to custody for specified hours following release for employment, schooling, or other limited purposes; and

"(N) satisfy any other condition that is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person as required and to assure the safety of any other person and the community.

The judicial officer may not impose a financial condition that results in the pretrial detention of the person. The judicial officer may at any time amend his order to impose additional or different conditions of release.

"(d) TEMPORARY DETENTION TO PERMIT REVOCATION OF CONDITIONAL RELEASE, DEPORTATION, OR EXCLUSION.—If the judicial officer determines that—

"(1) the person—

"(A) is, and was at the time the offense was committed, on—

"(i) release pending trial for a felony under Federal, State, or local law;

"(ii) release pending imposition or execution of sentence, appeal of sentence or conviction, or completion of sentence, for any offense under Federal, State, or local law; or

"(iii) probation or parole for any offense under Federal, State, or local law; or

"(B) is not a citizen of the United States or lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined in section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(20)); and

"(2) the person may flee or pose a danger to any other person or the community;

he shall order the detention of the person, for a period of not more than ten days, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, and direct the attorney for the Government to notify the appropriate court, probation or parole official, or State or local law enforcement official, or the appropriate official of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. If the official fails or declines to take the person into custody during that period, the person shall be treated in accordance with the other provisions of this section, notwithstanding the applicability of other provisions of law governing release pending trial or deportation or exclusion proceedings. If temporary detention is sought under paragraph (1)(B), the person has the burden of proving to the court that he is a citizen of the United States or is lawfully admitted for permanent residence.

"(e) DETENTION.—If, after a hearing pursuant to the provisions of subsection (f), the judicial officer finds that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community, he shall order the detention of the person prior to trial. In a case described in (f)(1), a rebuttable presumption arises that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the safety of any other person and the community if the judge finds that—

"(1) the person has been convicted of a Federal offense that is described in subsection (f)(1), or of a State or local offense that would have been an offense described in subsection (f)(1) if a circumstance giving rise to Federal jurisdiction had existed;

"(2) the offense described in paragraph (1) was committed while the person was on release pending trial for a Federal, State, or local offense; and

"(3) a period of not more than five years has elapsed since the date of conviction, or the release of the person from imprisonment, for the offense described in paragraph (1), whichever is later.

Subject to rebuttal by the person, it shall be presumed that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of the community if the judicial officer finds that there is probable cause to believe that the person committed an offense for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), section 1 of the Act of September 15, 1980 (21 U.S.C. 955a), or an offense under section 924(c) of title 18 of the United States Code.

"(f) DETENTION HEARING.—The judicial officer shall hold a hearing to determine whether any condition or combination of conditions set forth in subsection (c) will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community in a case—

"(1) upon motion of the attorney for the Government, that involves—

"(A) a crime of violence;

"(B) an offense for which the maximum sentence is life imprisonment or death;

"(C) an offense for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 951 et seq.), or section 1 of the Act of September 15, 1980 (21 U.S.C. 955a); or

"(D) any felony committed after the person had been convicted of two or more prior offenses described in subparagraphs (A) through (C), or two or more State or local offenses that would have been offenses described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) if a circumstance giving rise to Federal jurisdiction had existed; or

"(2) Upon motion of the attorney for the Government or upon the judicial officer's own motion, that involves—

"(A) a serious risk that the person will flee;

"(B) a serious risk that the person will obstruct or attempt to obstruct justice, or threaten, injure, or intimidate, or attempt to threaten, injure, or intimidate, a prospective witness or juror.

The hearing shall be held immediately upon the person's first appearance before the judicial officer unless that person, or the attorney for the Government, seeks a continuance. Except for good cause, a continuance on motion of the person may not exceed five days, and a continuance on motion of the attorney for the Government may not exceed three days. During a continuance, the person shall be detained, and the judicial officer, on motion of the attorney for the Government or on his own motion, may order that, while in custody, a person who appears to be a narcotics addict receive a medical examination to determine whether he is an addict. At the hearing, the person has the right to be represented by counsel, and, if he is financially unable to obtain adequate representation, to have counsel appointed for him. The person shall be afforded an opportunity to testify, to present witnesses on his own behalf, to cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing, and to present information by proffer or otherwise. The rules concerning admissibility of evidence in criminal trials do not apply to the presentation and consideration of information at the hearing. The facts the judicial officer uses to support a finding pursuant to subsection (e) that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the safety of any other person and the community shall be supported by clear and convincing evidence. The person may be detained pending completion of the hearing.

"(g) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED.—The judicial officer shall, in determining whether there are conditions of release that will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community, take into account the available information concerning—

"(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged, including whether the offense is a crime of violence or involves a narcotic drug;

"(2) the weight of the evidence against the person;

"(3) the history and characteristics of the person, including—

"(A) his character, physical and mental condition, family ties, employment, financial resources, length of residence in the community, community ties, past conduct, history relating to drug or alcohol abuse, criminal history, and record concerning appearance at court proceedings; and

"(B) whether, at the time of the current offense or arrest, he was on probation, on parole, or on other release pending trial, sentencing, appeal, or completion of sentence for an offense under Federal, State, or local law; and

"(4) the nature and seriousness of the danger to any person or the community that would be posed by the person's release. In considering the conditions of release described in subsection (c)(2)(K) or (c)(2)(L), the judicial officer may upon his own motion, or shall upon the motion of the Government, conduct an inquiry into the source of the property to be designated for potential forfeiture or offered as collateral to secure a bond, and shall decline to accept the designation, or the use as collateral, of property that, because of its source, will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required.

"(h) CONTENTS OF RELEASE ORDER.—In a release order issued pursuant to the provisions of subsection (b) or (c), the judicial officer shall—

"(1) include a written statement that sets forth all the conditions to which the release is subject, in a manner sufficiently clear and specific to serve as a guide for the person's conduct; and

"(2) advise the person of—

"(A) the penalties for violating a condition of release, including the penalties for committing an offense while on pretrial release;

"(B) the consequences of violating a condition of release, including the immediate issuance of a warrant for the person's arrest; and

"(C) the provisions of sections 1503 of this title (relating to intimidation of witnesses, jurors, and officers of the court), 1510 (relating to obstruction of criminal investigations), 1512 (tampering with a witness, victim, or an informant), and 1513 (retaliating against a witness, victim, or an informant).

"(i) CONTENTS OF DETENTION ORDER.—In a detention order issued pursuant to the provisions of subsection (e), the judicial officer shall—

"(1) include written findings of fact and a written statement of the reasons for the detention;

"(2) direct that the person be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for confinement in a corrections facility separate, to the extent practicable, from persons awaiting or serving sentences or being held in custody pending appeal;

"(3) direct that the person be afforded reasonable opportunity for private consultation with his counsel; and

"(4) direct that, on order of a court of the United States or on request of an attorney for the Government, the person in charge of the corrections facility in which the person is confined deliver the person to a United States marshal for the purpose of an appearance in connection with a court proceeding.

The judicial officer may, by subsequent order, permit the temporary release of the person, in the custody of a United States marshal or another appropriate person, to the extent that the judicial officer determines such release to be necessary for preparation of the person's defense or for another compelling reason.

"(j) PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as modifying or limiting the presumption of innocence.

"§ 3143. Release or detention of a defendant pending sentence or appeal

"(a) RELEASE OR DETENTION PENDING SENTENCE.—The judicial officer shall order that a person who has been found guilty of an offense and who is waiting imposition or execution of sentence, be detained, unless the judicial officer finds by clear and convincing evidence that the person is not likely to flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community if released pursuant to section 3142 (b) or (c). If the judicial officer makes such a finding, he shall order the release of the person in accordance with the provisions of section 3142 (b) or (c).

"(b) RELEASE OR DETENTION PENDING APPEAL BY THE DEFENDANT.—The judicial officer shall order that a person who has been found guilty of an offense and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and who has filed an appeal or a petition for a writ of certiorari, be detained, unless the judicial officer finds—

"(1) by clear and convincing evidence that the person is not likely to flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community if released pursuant to section 3142 (b) or (c); and

"(2) that the appeal is not for purpose of delay and raises a substantial question of law or fact likely to result in reversal or an order for a new trial.

If the judicial officer makes such findings, he shall order the release of the person in accordance with the provisions of section 3142 (b) or (c).

"(c) RELEASE OR DETENTION PENDING APPEAL BY THE GOVERNMENT.—The judicial officer shall treat a defendant in a case in which an appeal has been taken by the United States pursuant to the provisions of section 3731 of this title, in accordance with the provisions of section 3142, unless the defendant is otherwise subject to a release or detention order.

"§ 3144. Release or detention of a material witness

"If it appears from an affidavit filed by a party that the testimony of a person is material in a criminal proceeding, and if it is shown that it may become impracticable to secure the presence of the person by subpena, a judicial officer may order the arrest of the person and treat the person in accordance with the provisions of section 3142. No material witness may be detained because of inability to comply with any condition of release if the testimony of such witness can adequately be secured by deposition, and if further detention is not necessary to prevent a failure of justice. Release of a material witness may be delayed for a reasonable period of time until the deposition of the witness can be taken pursuant to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"§ 3145. Review and appeal of a release or detention order

"(a) REVIEW OF A RELEASE ORDER.—If a person is ordered released by a magistrate, or by a person other than a judge of a court having original jurisdiction over the offense and other than a Federal appellate court—

"(1) the attorney for the Government may file, with the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, a motion for revocation of the order or amendment of the conditions of release; and

"(2) the person may file, with the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, a motion for amendment of the conditions of release.

The motion shall be determined promptly.

"(b) REVIEW OF A DETENTION ORDER.—If a person is ordered detained by a magistrate, or by a person other than a judge of a court having original jurisdiction over the offense and other than a Federal appellate court, the person may file, with the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, a motion for revocation or amendment of the order. The motion shall be determined promptly.

"(c) APPEAL FROM A RELEASE OR DETENTION ORDER.—An appeal from a release or detention order, or from a decision denying revocation or amendment of such an order, is governed by the provisions of section 1291 of title 28 and section 3731 of this title. The appeal shall be determined promptly.

"§ 3146. Penalty for failure to appear

"(a) OFFENSE.—A person commits an offense if, after having been released pursuant to this chapter—

"(1) he knowingly fails to appear before a court as required by the conditions of his release; or

"(2) he knowingly fails to surrender for service of sentence pursuant to a court order.

"(b) GRADING.—If the person was released—

"(1) in connection with a charge of, or while awaiting sentence, surrender for service of sentence, or appeal or certiorari after conviction, for—

"(A) an offense punishable by death, life imprisonment, or imprisonment for a term of fifteen years or more, he shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned for not more than ten years, or both;

"(B) an offense punishable by imprisonment for a term of five or more years, but less than fifteen years, he shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both;

"(C) any other felony, he shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than two years, or both; or

"(D) a misdemeanor, he shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both; or

"(2) for appearance as a material witness, he shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

A term of imprisonment imposed pursuant to this section shall be consecutive to the sentence of imprisonment for any other offense.

"(c) AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE.—It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under this section that uncontrollable circumstances prevented the person from appearing or surrendering, and that the person did not contribute to the creation of such circumstances in reckless disregard of the requirement that he appear or surrender, and that he appeared or surrendered as soon as such circumstances ceased to exist.

"(d) DECLARATION OF FORFEITURE.—If a person fails to appear before a court as required, and the person executed an appearance bond pursuant to section 3142(b) or is subject to the release condition set forth in section 3142 (c)(2)(K), or (c)(2)(L), the judicial officer may, regardless of whether the person has been charged with an offense under this section, declare any property designated pursuant to that section to be forfeited to the United States.

"§ 3147. Penalty for an offense committed while on release

"A person convicted of an offense committed while released pursuant to this chapter shall be sentenced, in addition to the sentence prescribed for the offense to—

"(1) a term of imprisonment of not less than two years and not more than ten years if the offense is a felony; or

"(2) a term of imprisonment of not less than ninety days and not more than one year if the offense is a misdemeanor.

A term of imprisonment imposed pursuant to this section shall be consecutive to any other sentence of imprisonment.

"§ 3148. Sanctions for violation of a release condition

"(a) AVAILABLE SANCTIONS.—A person who has been released pursuant to the provisions of section 3142, and who has violated a condition of his release, is subject to a revocation of release, an order of detention, and a prosecution for contempt of court.

"(b) REVOCATION OF RELEASE.—The attorney for the Government may initiate a proceeding for revocation of an order of release by filing a motion with the district court. A judicial officer may issue a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with violating a condition of release, and the person shall be brought before a judicial officer in the district in which his arrest was ordered for a proceeding in accordance with this section. To the extent practicable, a person charged with violating the condition of his release that he not commit a Federal, State, or local crime during the period of release shall be brought before the judicial officer who ordered the release and whose order is alleged to have been violated. The judicial officer shall enter an order of revocation and detention if, after a hearing, the judicial officer—

"(1) finds that there is—

"(A) probable cause to believe that the person has committed a Federal, State, or local crime while on release; or

"(B) clear and convincing evidence that the person has violated any other condition of his release; and

"(2) finds that—

"(A) based on the factors set forth in section 3142(g), there is no condition or combination of conditions of release that will assure that the person will not flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community; or

"(B) the person is unlikely to abide by any condition or combination of conditions of release.

If there is probable cause to believe that, while on release, the person committed a Federal, State, or local felony, a rebuttable presumption arises that no condition or combination of conditions will assure that the person will not pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community. If the judicial officer finds that there are conditions of release that will assure that the person will not flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community, and that the person will abide by such conditions, he shall treat the person in accordance with the provisions of section 3142 and may amend the conditions of release accordingly.

"(c) PROSECUTION FOR CONTEMPT.—The judge may commence a prosecution for contempt, pursuant to the provisions of section 401, if the person has violated a condition of his release.

"§ 3149. Surrender of an offender by a surety

"A person charged with an offense, who is released upon the execution of an appearance bond with a surety, may be arrested by the surety, and if so arrested, shall be delivered promptly to a United States marshal and brought before a judicial officer. The judicial officer shall determine in accordance with the provisions of section 3148(b) whether to revoke the release of the person, and may absolve the surety of responsibility to pay all or part of the bond in accordance with the provisions of Rule 46 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. "SUBCHAPTER A—GENERAL PROVISIONS

"§ 3551. Authorized sentences

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise specifically provided, a defendant who has been found guilty of an offense described in any Federal statute, other than an Act of Congress applicable exclusively in the District of Columbia or the Uniform Code of Military Justice, shall be sentenced in accordance with the provisions of this chapter so as to achieve the purposes set forth in subparagraphs (A) through (D) of section 3553(a)(2) to the extent that they are applicable in light of all the circumstances of the case.

"(b) INDIVIDUALS.—An individual found guilty of an offense shall be sentenced, in accordance with the provisions of section 3553, to—

"(1) a term of probation as authorized by subchapter B;

"(2) a fine as authorized by subchapter C; or

"(3) a term of imprisonment as authorized by subchapter D.

A sentence to pay a fine may be imposed in addition to any other sentence. A sanction authorized by section 3554, 3555, or 3556 may be imposed in addition to the sentence required by this subsection.

"§ 3552. Presentence reports

"(a) PRESENTENCE INVESTIGATION AND REPORT BY PROBATION OFFICER.—A United States probation officer shall make a presentence investigation of a defendant that is required pursuant to the provisions of Rule 32(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, and shall, before the imposition of sentence, report the results of the investigation to the court.

"(b) PRESENTENCE STUDY AND REPORT BY BUREAU OF PRISONS.—If the court, before or after its receipt of a report specified in subsection (a) or (c), desires more information than is otherwise available to it as a basis for determining the sentence to be imposed on a defendant found guilty of a misdemeanor or felony, it may order a study of the defendant. The study shall be conducted in the local community by qualified consultants unless the sentencing judge finds that there is a compelling reason for the study to be done by the Bureau of Prisons or there are no adequate professional resources available in the local community to perform the study. The period of the study shall take no more than sixty days. The order shall specify the additional information that the court needs before determining the sentence to be imposed. Such an order shall be treated for administrative purposes as a provisional sentence of imprisonment for the maximum term authorized by section 3581(b) for the offense committed. The study shall inquire into such matters as are specified by the court and any other matters that the Bureau of Prisons or the professional consultants believe are pertinent to the factors set forth in section 3553(a). The period of the study may, in the discretion of the court, be extended for an additional period of not more than sixty days. By the expiration of the period of the study, or by the expiration of any extension granted by the court, the United States marshal shall return the defendant to the court for final sentencing. The Bureau of Prisons or the professional consultants shall provide the court with a written report of the pertinent results of the study and make to the court whatever recommendations the Bureau or the consultants believe will be helpful to a proper resolution of the case. The report shall include recommendations of the Bureau or the consultants concerning the guidelines and policy statements, promulgated by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a), that they believe are applicable to the defendant's case. After receiving the report and the recommendations, the court shall proceed finally to sentence the defendant in accordance with the sentencing alternatives and procedures available under this chapter.

"(c) PRESENTENCE EXAMINATION AND REPORT BY PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL

EXAMINERS.—If the court, before or after its receipt of a report specified in subsection (a) or (b) desires more information than is otherwise available to it as a basis for determining the mental condition of the defendant, it may order that the defendant undergo a psychiatric or psychological examination and that the court be provided with a written report of the results of the examination pursuant to the provisions of section 4247.

"(d) DISCLOSURE OF PRESENTENCE REPORTS.—The court shall assure that a report filed pursuant to this section is disclosed to the defendant, the counsel for the defendant, and the attorney for the Government at least ten days prior to the date set for sentencing, unless this minimum period is waived by the defendant.

"§ 3553. Imposition of a sentence

"(a) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING A SENTENCE.—The court, in determining the particular sentence to be imposed, shall consider—

"(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant;

"(2) the need for the sentenced imposed—

"(A) to reflect the seriousness of the offense, to promote respect for the law, and to provide just punishment for the offense;

"(B) to afford adequate deterrence to criminal conduct;

"(C) to protect the public from further crimes of the defendant; and

"(D) to provide the defendant with needed educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment in the most effective manner;

"(3) the kinds of sentences available;

"(4) the kinds of sentence and the sentencing range established for the applicable category of offense committed by the applicable category of defendant as set forth in the guidelines that are issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a)(1) and that are in effect on the date the defendant is sentenced;

"(5) any pertinent policy statement issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a)(2) that is in effect on the date the defendant is sentenced; and

"(6) the need to avoid unwarranted sentence disparities among defendants with similar records who have been found guilty of similar conduct.

"(b) APPLICATION OF GUIDELINES IN IMPOSING A SENTENCE.—The court shall impose a sentence of the kind, and within the range, referred to in subsection (a)(4) unless the court finds that an aggravating or mitigating circumstance exists that was not adequately taken into consideration by the Sentencing Commission in formulating the guidelines and that should result in a sentence different from that described.

"(c) STATEMENT OF REASONS FOR IMPOSING A SENTENCE.—The court, at the time of sentencing, shall state in open court the reasons for its imposition of the particular sentence, and, if the sentence—

"(1) is of the kind, and within the range, described in subsection (a)(4), the reason for imposing a sentence at a particular point within the range; or

"(2) is not of the kind, or is outside the range, described in subsection (a)(4), the specific reason for the imposition of a sentence different from that described.

If the sentence does not include an order of restitution, the court shall include in the statement the reason therefor. The clerk of the court shall provide a transcription of the court's statement of reasons to the Probation System, and, if the sentence includes a term of imprisonment, to the Bureau of Prisons.

"(d) PRESENTENCE PROCEDURE FOR AN ORDER OF NOTICE OR RESTITUTION.—Prior to imposing an order of notice pursuant to section 3555, or an order of restitution pursuant to section 3556, the court shall give notice to the defendant and the Government that it is considering imposing such an order. Upon motion of the defendant or the Government, or on its own motion, the court shall—

"(1) permit the defendant and the Government to submit affidavits and written memoranda addressing matters relevant to the imposition of such an order;

"(2) afford counsel an opportunity in open court to address orally the appropriateness of the imposition of such an order; and

"(3) include in its statement of reasons pursuant to subsection (c) specific reasons underlying its determinations regarding the nature of such an order.

Upon motion of the defendant or the Government, or on its own motion, the court may in its discretion employ any additional procedures that it concludes will not unduly complicate or prolong the sentencing process.

"§ 3554. Order of criminal forfeiture

"The court, in imposing a sentence on a defendant who has been found guilty of an offense described in section 1962 of this title or in title II or III of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 shall order, in addition to the sentence that is imposed pursuant to the provisions of section 3551, that the defendant forfeit property to the United States in accordance with the provisions of section 1963 of this title or section 413 of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse and Control Act of 1970.

"§ 3555. Order of notice to victims

"The court, in imposing a sentence on a defendant who has been found guilty of an offense involving fraud or other intentionally deceptive practices, may order, in addition to the sentence that is imposed pursuant to the provisions of section 3551, that the defendant give reasonable notice and explanation of the conviction, in such form as the court may approve, to the victims of the offense. The notice may be ordered to be given by mail, by advertising in designated areas or through designated media, or by other appropriate means. In determining whether to require the defendant to give such notice, the court shall consider the factors set forth in section 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable and shall consider the cost involved in giving the notice as it relates to the loss caused by the offense, and shall not require the defendant to bear the costs of notice in excess of $20,000.

"§ 3556. Order of restitution

"The court, in imposing a sentence on a defendant who has been found guilty of an offense under this title, or an offense under section 902 (h), (i), (j), or (n) of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. 1472), may order, in addition to the sentence that is imposed pursuant to the provisions of section 3551, that the defendant make restitution to any victim of the offense in accordance with the provisions of sections 3663 and 3664.

"(1) the factors set forth in section 3553(a), to the extent they are applicable, including, with regard to the characteristics of the defendant under section 3553(a), the ability of the defendant to pay the fine in view of the defendant's income, earning capacity, and financial resources and, if the defendant is an organization, the size of the organization;

"(2) the nature of the burden that payment of the fine will impose on the defendant, and on any person who is financially dependent upon the defendant, relative to the burden which alternative punishments would impose;

"(3) any restitution or reparation made by the defendant to the victim of the offense, and any obligation imposed upon the defendant to make such restitution or reparation to the victim of the offense;

"(4) if the defendant is an organization, any measure taken by the organization to discipline its employees or agents responsible for the offense or to insure against a recurrence of such an offense; and

"(5) any other pertinent equitable consideration.

"(b) LIMIT ON AGGREGATE OF MULTIPLE FINES.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, the aggregate of fines that a court may impose on a defendant at the same time for different offenses that arise from a common scheme or plan, and that do not cause separable or distinguishable kinds of harm or damage, is twice the amount imposable for the most serious offense.

"(c) EFFECT OF FINALITY OF JUDGMENT.—Notwithstanding the fact that a sentence to pay a fine can subsequently be—

"(1) modified or remitted pursuant to the provisions of section 3573;

"(2) corrected pursuant to the provisions of rule 35 and section 3742; or

"(3) appealed and modified, if outside the guideline range, pursuant to the provisions of section 3742;

a judgment of conviction that includes such a sentence constitutes a final judgment for all other purposes.

"(d) TIME AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—Payment of a fine is due immediately unless the court, at the time of sentencing—

"(1) requires payment by a date certain; or

"(2) establishes an installment schedule, the specific terms of which shall be fixed by the court.

"(e) ALTERNATIVE SENTENCE PRECLUDED.—At the time a defendant is sentenced to pay a fine, the court may not impose an alternative sentence to be served in the event that the fine is not paid.

"(f) INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR PAYMENT.—If a fine is imposed on an organization, it is the duty of each individual authorized to make disbursement of the assets of the organization to pay the fine from assets of the organization. If a fine is imposed on an agent or shareholder of an organization, the fine shall not be paid, directly or indirectly, out of the assets of the organization, unless the court finds that such payment is expressly permissible under applicable State law.

"(g) RESPONSIBILITY TO PROVIDE CURRENT ADDRESS.—At the time of imposition of the fine, the court shall order the person fined to provide the Attorney General with a current mailing address for the entire period that any part of the fine remains unpaid. Failure to provide the Attorney General with a current address or a change in address shall be punishable as a contempt of court.

"(h) STAY OF FINE PENDING APPEALS.—Unless exceptional circumstances exist, if a sentence to pay a fine is stayed pending appeal, the court granting the stay shall include in such stay—

"(1) a requirement that the defendant, pending appeal, to deposit the entire fine amount, or the amount due under an installment schedule, during the pendency of an appeal, in an escrow account in the registry of the district court, or to give bond for the payment thereof; or

"(2) an order restraining the defendant from transferring or dissipating assets found to be sufficient, if sold, to meet the defendant's fine obligation.

"(i) DELINQUENT FINE.—A fine is delinquent if any portion of such fine is not paid within thirty days of when it is due, including any fines to be paid pursuant to an installment schedule.

"(j) DEFAULT.—A fine is in default if any portion of such fine is more than ninety days delinquent. When a criminal fine is in default, the entire amount is due within thirty days of notification of the default, notwithstanding any installment schedule.

"§ 3573. Modification or remission of fine

"(a) PETITION FOR MODIFICATION OR REMISSION.—A defendant who has been sentenced to pay a fine, and who—

"(1) can show a good faith effort to comply with the terms of the sentence and concerning whom the circumstances no longer exist that warranted the imposition of the fine in the amount imposed or payment by the installment schedule, may at any time petition the court for—

"(A) an extension of the installment schedule, not to exceed two years except in case of incarceration or special circumstances; or

"(B) a remission of all or part of the unpaid portion including interest and penalties; or

"(2) has voluntarily made restitution or reparation to the victim of the offense, may at any time petition the court for a remission of the unpaid portion of the fine in an amount not exceeding the amount of such restitution or reparation.

Any petition filed pursuant to this subsection shall be filed in the court in which sentence was originally imposed, unless that court transfers jurisdiction to another court. The petitioner shall notify the Attorney General that the petition has been filed within ten working days after filing. For the purposes of clause (1), unless exceptional circumstances exist, a person may be considered to have made a good faith effort to comply with the terms of the sentence only after payment of a reasonable portion of the fine.

"(b) ORDER OF MODIFICATION OR REMISSION.—If, after the filing of a petition as provided in subsection (a), the court finds that the circumstances warrant relief, the court may enter an appropriate order, in which case it shall provide the Attorney General with a copy of such order.

"SUBCHAPTER D—IMPRISONMENT

"§ 3581. Sentence of imprisonment

"(a) IN GENERAL.—A defendant who has been found guilty of an offense may be sentenced to a term of imprisonment.

"(b) AUTHORIZED TERMS.—The authorized terms of imprisonment are—

"(1) for a Class A felony, the duration of the defendant's life or any period of time;

"(2) for a Class B felony, not more than twenty-five years;

"(3) for a Class C felony, not more than twelve years;

"(4) for a Class D felony, not more than six years;

"(5) for a Class E felony, not more than three years;

"(6) for a Class A misdemeanor, not more than one year;

"(7) for a Class B misdemeanor, not more than six months;

"(8) for a Class C misdemeanor, not more than thirty days; and

"(9) for an infraction, not more than five days.

"§ 3582. Imposition of a sentence of imprisonment

"(a) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING A TERM OF IMPRISONMENT.—The court, in determining whether to impose a term of imprisonment, and, if a term of imprisonment is to be imposed, in determining the length of the term, shall consider the factors set forth in section 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable, recognizing that imprisonment is not an appropriate means of promoting correction and rehabilitation. In determining whether to make a recommendation concerning the type of prison facility appropriate for the defendant, the court shall consider any pertinent policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a)(2).

"(b) EFFECT OF FINALITY OF JUDGMENT.—Notwithstanding the fact that a sentence to imprisonment can subsequently be—

"(1) modified pursuant to the provisions of subsection (c);

"(2) corrected pursuant to the provisions of rule 35 and section 3742; or

"(3) appealed and modified, if outside the guideline range, pursuant to the provisions of section 3742;

a judgment of conviction that includes such a sentence constitutes a final judgment for all other purposes.

"(c) MODIFICATION OF AN IMPOSED TERM OF IMPRISONMENT.—The court may not modify a term of imprisonment once it has been imposed except that—

"(1) in any case—

"(A) the court, upon motion of the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, may reduce the term of imprisonment, after considering the factors set forth in section 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable, if it finds that extraordinary and compelling reasons warrant such a reduction and that such a reduction is consistent with applicable policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission; and

"(B) the court may modify an imposed term of imprisonment to the extent otherwise expressly permitted by statute or by Rule 35 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure; and

"(2) in the case of a defendant who has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment based on a sentencing range that has subsequently been lowered by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(n), upon motion of the defendant or the Director of the Bureau of Prisons, or on its own motion, the court may reduce the term of imprisonment, after considering the factors set forth in section 3553(a) to the extent that they are applicable, if such a reduction is consistent with applicable policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission.

"(d) INCLUSION OF AN ORDER TO LIMIT CRIMINAL ASSOCIATION OF ORGANIZED CRIME AND DRUG OFFENDERS.—The court, in imposing a sentence to a term of imprisonment upon a defendant convicted of a felony set forth in chapter 95 (racketeering) or 96 (racketeer influenced and corrupt organizations) of this title or in the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.), or at any time thereafter upon motion by the Director of the Bureau of Prisons or a United States attorney, may include as a part of the sentence an order that requires that the defendant not associate or communicate with a specified person, other than his attorney, upon a showing of probable cause to believe that association or communication with such person is for the purpose of enabling the defendant to control, manage, direct, finance, or otherwise participate in an illegal enterprise.

"§ 3583. Inclusion of a term of supervised release after imprisonment

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The court, in imposing a sentence to a term of imprisonment for a felony or a misdemeanor, may include as a part of the sentence a requirement that the defendant be placed on a term of supervised release after imprisonment.

"(b) AUTHORIZED TERMS OF SUPERVISED RELEASE.—The authorized terms of supervised release are—

"(1) for a Class A or Class B felony, not more than three years;

"(2) for a Class C or Class D felony, not more than two years; and

"(3) for a Class E felony, or for a misdemeanor, not more than one year.

"(c) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN INCLUDING A TERM OF SUPERVISED RELEASE.—The court, in determining whether to include a term of supervised release, and, if a term of supervised release is to be included, in determining the length of the term and the conditions of supervised release, shall consider the factors set forth in section 3553(a)(1), (a)(2)(B), (a)(2)(D), (a)(4), (a)(5), and (a)(6).

"(d) CONDITIONS OF SUPERVISED RELEASE.—The court shall order, as an explicit condition of supervised release, that the defendant not commit another Federal, State, or local crime during the term of supervision. The court may order, as a further condition of supervised release, to the extent that such condition—

"(1) is reasonably related to the factors set forth in section 3553 (a)(1), (a)(2)(B), and (a)(2)(D);

"(2) involves no greater deprivation of liberty than is reasonably necessary for the purposes set forth in section 3553 (a)(2)(B) and (a)(2)(D); and

"(3) is consistent with any pertinent policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a);

any condition set forth as a discretionary condition of probation in section 3563 (b)(1) through (b)(10) and (b)(12) through (b)(19), and any other condition it considers to be appropriate. If an alien defendant is subject to deportation, the court may provide, as a condition of supervised release, that he be deported and remain outside the United States, and may order that he be delivered to a duly authorized immigration official for such deportation.

"(e) MODIFICATION OF TERM OR CONDITIONS.—The court may, after considering the factors set forth in section 3553(a)(1), (a)(2)(B), (a)(2)(D), (a)(4), (a)(5), and (a)(6)—

"(1) terminate a term of supervised release previously ordered and discharge the person released at any time after the expiration of one year of supervised release, if it is satisfied that such action is warranted by the conduct of the person released and the interest of justice;

"(2) after a hearing, extend a term of supervised release if less than the maximum authorized term was previously imposed, and may modify, reduce, or enlarge the conditions of supervised release, at any time prior to the expiration or termination of the term of supervised release, pursuant to the provisions applicable to the initial setting of the term and conditions of post-release supervision; or

"(3) treat a violation of a condition of a term of supervised release as contempt of court pursuant to section 401(3) of this title.

"(f) WRITTEN STATEMENT OF CONDITIONS.—The court shall direct that the probation officer provide the defendant with a written statement that sets forth all the conditions to which the term of supervised release is subject, and that is sufficiently clear and specific to serve as a guide for the defendant's conduct and for such supervision as is required.

"§ 3584. Multiple sentences of imprisonment

"(a) IMPOSITION OF CONCURRENT OR CONSECUTIVE TERMS.—If multiple terms of imprisonment are imposed on a defendant at the same time, or if a term of imprisonment is imposed on a defendant who is already subject to an undischarged term of imprisonment, the terms may run concurrently or consecutively, except that the terms may not run consecutively for an attempt and for another offense that was the sole objective of the attempt. Multiple terms of imprisonment imposed at the same time run concurrently unless the court orders or the statute mandates that the terms are to run consecutively. Multiple terms of imprisonment imposed at different times run consecutively unless the court orders that the terms are to run concurrently.

"(b) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING CONCURRENT OR CONSECUTIVE TERMS.—The court, in determining whether the terms imposed are to be ordered to run concurrently or consecutively, shall consider, as to each offense for which a term of imprisonment is being imposed, the factors set forth in section 3553(a).

"(c) TREATMENT OF MULTIPLE SENTENCE AS AN AGGREGATE.—Multiple terms of imprisonment ordered to run consecutively or concurrently shall be treated for administrative purposes as a single, aggregate term of imprisonment.

"§ 3585. Calculation of a term of imprisonment

"(a) COMMENCEMENT OF SENTENCE.—A sentence to a term of imprisonment commences on the date the defendant is received in custody awaiting transportation to, or arrives voluntarily to commence service of sentence at, the official detention facility at which the sentence is to be served.

"(b) CREDIT FOR PRIOR CUSTODY.—A defendant shall be given credit toward the service of a term of imprisonment for any time he has spent in official detention prior to the date the sentence commences—

"(1) as a result of the offense for which the sentence was imposed; or

"(2) as a result of any other charge for which the defendant was arrested after the commission of the offense for which the sentence was imposed; that has not been credited against another sentence.

"§ 3586. Implementation of a sentence of imprisonment

"The implementation of a sentence of imprisonment is governed by the provisions of subchapter C of chapter 229 and, if the sentence includes a term of supervised release, by the provisions of subchapter A of chapter 229.

"§ 3601. Supervision of probation

"A person who has been sentenced to probation pursuant to the provisions of subchapter B of chapter 227, or placed on probation pursuant to the provisions of chapter 403, or placed on supervised release pursuant to the provisions of section 3583, shall, during the term imposed, be supervised by a probation officer to the degree warranted by the conditions specified by the sentencing court.

"§ 3602. Appointment of probation officers

"(a) APPOINTMENT.—A district court of the United States shall appoint qualified persons to serve, with or without compensation, as probation officers within the jurisdiction and under the direction of the court making the appointment. The court may, for cause, remove a probation officer appointed to serve with compensation, and may, in its discretion, remove a probation officer appointed to serve without compensation.

"(b) RECORD OF APPOINTMENT.—The order of appointment shall be entered on the records of the court, a copy of the order shall be delivered to the officer appointed, and a copy shall be sent to the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts.

"(c) CHIEF PROBATION OFFICER.—If the court appoints more than one probation officer, one may be designated by the court as chief probation officer and shall direct the work of all probation officers serving in the judicial district.

"§ 3603. Duties of probation officers

"A probation officer shall—

"(a) instruct a probationer or a person on supervised release, who is under his supervision, as to the conditions specified by the sentencing court, and provide him with a written statement clearly setting forth all such conditions;

"(b) keep informed, to the degree required by the conditions specified by the sentencing court, as to the conduct and condition of a probationer or a person on supervised release, who is under his supervision, and report his conduct and condition to the sentencing court;

"(c) use all suitable methods, not inconsistent with the conditions specified by the court, to aid a probationer or a person on supervised release who is under his supervision, and to bring about improvements in his conduct and condition;

"(d) be responsible for the supervision of any probationer or a person on supervised release who is known to be within the judicial district;

"(e) keep a record of his work, and make such reports to the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts as the Director may require;

"(f) upon request of the Attorney General or his designee, supervise and furnish information about a person within the custody of the Attorney General while on work release, furlough, or other authorized release from his regular place of confinement, or while in prerelease custody pursuant to the provisions of section 3624(c);

"(g) keep informed concerning the conduct, condition, and compliance with any condition of probation, including the payment of a fine or restitution of each probationer under his supervision and report thereon to the court placing such person on probation and report to the court any failure of probationer under his supervision to pay a fine in default within thirty days after notification that it is in default so that the court may determine whether probation should be revoked; and

"(h) perform any other duty that the court may designate.

"§ 3604. Transportation of a probationer

"A court, after imposing a sentence of probation, may direct a United States marshal to furnish the probationer with—

"(a) transportation to the place to which he is required to proceed as a condition of his probation; and

"(b) money, not to exceed such amount as the Attorney General may prescribe, for subsistence expenses while traveling to his destination.

"§ 3605. Transfer of jurisdiction over a probationer

"A court, after imposing a sentence, may transfer jurisdiction over a probationer or person on supervised release to the district court for any other district to which the person is required to proceed as a condition of his probation or release, or is permitted to proceed, with the concurrence of such court. A later transfer of jurisdiction may be made in the same manner. A court to which jurisdiction is transferred under this section is authorized to exercise all powers over the probationer or releasee that are permitted by this subchapter or subchapter B or D of chapter 227.

"§ 3606. Arrest and return of a probationer

"If there is probable cause to believe that a probationer or a person on supervised release has violated a condition of his probation or release, he may be arrested, and, upon arrest, shall be taken without unnecessary delay before the court having jurisdiction over him. A probation officer may make such an arrest wherever the probationer or releasee is found, and may make the arrest without a warrant. The court having supervision of the probationer or releasee, or, if there is no such court, the court last having supervision of the probationer or releasee, may issue a warrant for the arrest of a probationer or releasee for violation of a condition of release, and a probation officer or United States marshal may execute the warrant in the district in which the warrant was issued or in any district in which the probationer or releasee is found.

"§ 3607. Special probation and expungement procedures for drug possessors

"(a) PRE-JUDGMENT PROBATION.—If a person found guilty of an offense described in section 404 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 844)—

"(1) has not, prior to the commission of such offense, been convicted of violating a Federal or State law relating to controlled substances; and

"(2) has not previously been the subject of a disposition under this subsection;

the court may, with the consent of such person, place him on probation for a term of not more than one year without entering a judgment of conviction. At any time before the expiration of the term of probation, if the person has not violated a condition of his probation, the court may, without entering a judgment of conviction, dismiss the proceedings against the person and discharge him from probation. At the expiration of the term of probation, if the person has not violated a condition of his probation, the court shall, without entering a judgment of conviction, dismiss the proceedings against the person and discharge him from probation. If the person violates a condition of his probation, the court shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of section 3565.

"(b) RECORD OF DISPOSITION.—A nonpublic record of a disposition under subsection (a), or a conviction that is the subject of an expungement order under subsection (c), shall be retained by the Department of Justice solely for the purpose of use by the courts in determining in any subsequent proceeding whether a person qualifies for the disposition provided in subsection (a) or the expungement provided in subsection (c). A disposition under subsection (a), or a conviction that is the subject of an expungement order under subsection (c), shall not be considered a conviction for the purpose of a disqualification or a disability imposed by law upon conviction of a crime, or for any other purpose.

"(c) EXPUNGEMENT OF RECORD OF DISPOSITION.—If the case against a person found guilty of an offense under section 404 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 844) is the subject of a disposition under subsection (a), and the person was less than twenty-one years old at the time of the offense, the court shall enter an expungement order upon the application of such person. The expungement order shall direct that there be expunged from all official records, except the nonpublic records referred to in subsection (b), all references to his arrest for the offense, the institution of criminal proceedings against him, and the results thereof. The effect of the order shall be to restore such person, in the contemplation of the law, to the status he occupied before such arrest or institution of criminal proceedings. A person concerning whom such an order has been entered shall not be held thereafter under any provision of law to be guilty of perjury, false swearing, or making a false statement by reason of his failure to recite or acknowledge such arrests or institution of criminal proceedings, or the results thereof, in response to an inquiry made of him for any purpose.

"3611. Payment of a fine.
"3612. Collection of an unpaid fine.
"3613. Civil remedies for satisfaction of an unpaid fine.
"3614. Resentencing upon failure to pay a fine.
"3615. Criminal default.

"SUBCHAPTER B—FINES

"§ 3611. Payment of a fine

"A person who has been sentenced to pay a fine pursuant to the provisions of subchapter C of chapter 227 shall pay the fine immediately, or by the time and method specified by the sentencing court, to the clerk of the court. The clerk shall forward the payment to the United States Treasury.

"§ 3612. Collection of an unpaid fine

"(a) DISPOSITION OF PAYMENT.—The clerk shall forward each fine payment to the United States Treasury and shall notify the Attorney General of its receipt within 10 working days.

"(b) CERTIFICATION OF IMPOSITION.—If a fine exceeding $100 is imposed, modified, or remitted, the sentencing court shall incorporate in the order imposing, remitting, or modifying such fine, and promptly certify to the Attorney General—

"(1) the name of the person fined;

"(2) his current address;

"(3) the docket number of the case;

"(4) the amount of the fine imposed;

"(5) any installment schedule;

"(6) the nature of any modification or remission of the fine or installment schedule; and

"(7) the amount of the fine that is due and unpaid.

"(c) RESPONSIBILITY FOR COLLECTION.—The Attorney General shall be responsible for collection of an unpaid fine concerning which a certification has been issued as provided in subsection (a). An order of restitution, pursuant to section 3556, does not create any right of action against the United States by the person to whom restitution is ordered to be paid.

"(d) NOTIFICATION OF DELINQUENCY.—Within ten working days after a fine is determined to be delinquent as provided in section 3572(i), the Attorney General shall notify the person whose fine is delinquent, by certified mail, to inform him that the fine is delinquent.

"(e) NOTIFICATION OF DEFAULT.—Within ten working days after a fine is determined to be in default as provided in section 3572 (j), the Attorney General shall notify the person defaulting, by certified mail, to inform him that the fine is in default and the entire unpaid balance, including interest and penalties, is due within thirty days.

"(f) INTEREST, MONETARY PENALTIES FOR DELINQUENCY, AND DEFAULT.—Upon a determination of willful nonpayment, the court may impose the following interest and monetary penalties:

"(1) INTEREST.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, interest at the rate of 1 per centum per month, or 12 per centum per year, shall be charged, beginning the thirty-first day after sentencing on the first day of each month during which any fine balance remains unpaid, including sums to be paid pursuant to an installment schedule.

"(2) MONETARY PENALTIES FOR DELINQUENT FINES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a penalty sum equal to 10 per centum shall be charged for any portion of a criminal fine which has become delinquent. The Attorney General may waive all or part of the penalty for good cause.

"§ 3613. Civil remedies for satisfaction of an unpaid fine

"(a) LIEN.—A fine imposed pursuant to the provisions of subchapter C of chapter 227 is a lien in favor of the United States upon all property belonging to the person fined. The lien arises at the time of the entry of the judgment and continues until the liability is satisfied, remitted, or set aside, or until it becomes unenforceable pursuant to the provisions of subsection (b). On application of the person fined, the Attorney General shall—

"(1) issue a certificate of release, as described in section 6325 of the Internal Revenue Code, of any lien imposed pursuant to this section, upon his acceptance of a bond described in section 6325(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code; or

"(2) issue a certificate of discharge, as described in section 6325 of the Internal Revenue Code, of any part of the person's property subject to a lien imposed pursuant to this section, upon his determination that the fair market value of that part of such property remaining subject to and available to satisfy the lien is at least three times the amount of the fine.

"(b) EXPIRATION OF LIEN.—A lien becomes unenforceable and liability to pay a fine expires—

"(1) twenty years after the entry of the judgment; or

"(2) upon the death of the individual fined.

The period set forth in paragraph (1) may be extended, prior to its expiration, by a written agreement between the person fined and the Attorney General. The running of the period set forth in paragraph (1) is suspended during any interval for which the running of the period of limitations for collection of a tax would be suspended pursuant to section 6503(b), 6503(c), 6503(f), 6503(i), or 7508(a)(1)(I) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 6503(b), 6503(c), 6503(f), 6503(i), or 7508(a)(1)(I)), or section 513 of the Act of October 17, 1940, 54 Stat. 1190.

"(c) APPLICATION OF OTHER LIEN PROVISIONS.—The provisions of sections 6323, 6331, 6332, 6334 through 6336, 6337(a), 6338 through 6343, 6901, 7402, 7403, 7424 through 7426, 7505(a), 7506, 7701, and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 6323, 6331, 6332, 6334 through 6336, 6337(a), 6338 through 6343, 6901, 7402, 7403, 7424 through 7426, 7505(a), 7506, 7701, and 7805) and of section 513 of the Act of October 17, 1940, 54 Stat. 1190, apply to a fine and to the lien imposed by subsection (a) as if the liability of the person fined were for an internal revenue tax assessment, except to the extent that the application of such statutes is modified by regulations issued by the Attorney General to accord with differences in the nature of the liabilities. For the purposes of this subsection, references in the preceding sections of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to 'the Secretary' shall be construed to mean 'the Attorney General,' and references in those sections to 'tax' shall be construed to mean 'fine.'

"(d) EFFECT OF NOTICE OF LIEN.—A notice of the lien imposed by subsection (a) shall be considered a notice of lien for taxes payable to the United States for the purposes of any State or local law providing for the filing of a notice of a tax lien. The registration, recording, docketing, or indexing, in accordance with 28 U.S.C. 1962, of the judgment under which a fine is imposed shall be considered for all purposes as the filing prescribed by section 6323(f)(1)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 6323(f)(1)(A)) and by subsection (c).

"(e) ALTERNATIVE ENFORCEMENT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, a judgment imposing a fine may be enforced by execution against the property of the person fined in like manner as judgments in civil cases, but in no event shall liability for payment of a fine extend beyond the period specified in subsection (b).

"(f) DISCHARGE OF DEBTS INAPPLICABLE.—No discharge of debts pursuant to a bankruptcy proceeding shall render a lien under this section unenforceable or discharge liability to pay a fine.

"§ 3614. Resentencing upon failure to pay a fine

"(a) RESENTENCING.—Subject to the provisions of subsection (b), if a defendant knowingly fails to pay a delinquent fine the court may resentence the defendant to any sentence which might originally have been imposed.

"(b) IMPRISONMENT.—The defendant may be sentenced to a term of imprisonment under subsection (a) only if the court determines that—

"(1) the defendant willfully refused to pay the delinquent fine or had failed to make sufficient bona fide efforts to pay the fine; or

"(2) in light of the nature of the offense and the characteristics of the person, alternatives to imprisonment are not adequate to serve the purposes of punishment and deterrence.

"§ 3615. Criminal default

"Whoever, having been sentenced to pay a fine, willfully fails to pay the fine, shall be fined not more than twice the amount of the unpaid balance of the fine or $10,000, whichever is greater, imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

"§ 3621. Imprisonment of a convicted person

"(a) COMMITMENT TO CUSTODY OF BUREAU OF PRISONS.—A person who has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment pursuant to the provisions of subchapter D of chapter 227 shall be committed to the custody of the Bureau of Prisons until the expiration of the term imposed, or until earlier released for satisfactory behavior pursuant to the provisions of section 3624.

"(b) PLACE OF IMPRISONMENT.—The Bureau of Prisons shall designate the place of the prisoner's imprisonment. The Bureau may designate any available penal or correctional facility that meets minimum standards of health and habitability established by the Bureau, whether maintained by the Federal Government or otherwise and whether within or without the judicial district in which the person was convicted, that the Bureau determines to be appropriate and suitable, considering—

"(1) the resources of the facility contemplated;

"(2) the nature and circumstances of the offense;

"(3) the history and characteristics of the prisoner;

"(4) any statement by the court that imposed the sentence—

"(A) concerning the purposes for which the sentence to imprisonment was determined to be warranted; or

"(B) recommending a type of penal or correctional facility as appropriate; and

"(5) any pertinent policy statement issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to section 994(a)(2) of title 28.

The Bureau may at any time, having regard for the same matters, direct the transfer of a prisoner from one penal or correctional facility to another.

"(c) DELIVERY OF ORDER OF COMMITMENT.—When a prisoner, pursuant to a court order, is placed in the custody of a person in charge of a penal or correctional facility, a copy of the order shall be delivered to such person as evidence of this authority to hold the prisoner, and the original order, with the return endorsed thereon, shall be returned to the court that issued it.

"(d) DELIVERY OF PRISONER FOR COURT APPEARANCES.—The United States Marshal shall, without charge, bring a prisoner into court or return him to a prison facility on order of a court of the United States or on written request of an attorney for the Government.

"§ 3622. Temporary release of a prisoner

"The Bureau of Prisons may release a prisoner from the place of his imprisonment for a limited period if such release appears to be consistent with the purpose for which the sentence was imposed and any pertinent policy statement issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 994(a)(2), if such release otherwise appears to be consistent with the public interest and if there is reasonable cause to believe that a prisoner will honor the trust to be imposed in him, by authorizing him, under prescribed conditions, to—

"(a) visit a designated place for a period not to exceed thirty days, and then return to the same or another facility, for the purpose of—

"(1) visiting a relative who is dying;

"(2) attending a funeral of a relative;

"(3) obtaining medical treatment not otherwise available;

"(4) contacting a prospective employer;

"(5) establishing or reestablishing family or community ties; or

"(6) engaging in any other significant activity consistent with the public interest;

"(b) participate in a training or educational program in the community while continuing in official detention at the prison facility; or

"(c) work at paid employment in the community while continuing in official detention at the penal or correctional facility if—

"(1) the rates of pay and other conditions of employment will not be less than those paid or provided for work of a similar nature in the community; and

"(2) the prisoner agrees to pay to the Bureau such costs incident to official detention as the Bureau finds appropriate and reasonable under all the circumstances, such costs to be collected by the Bureau and deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the appropriation available for such costs at the time such collections are made.

"§ 3623. Transfer of a prisoner to state authority

"The Director of the Bureau of Prisons shall order that a prisoner who has been charged in an indictment or information with, or convicted of, a State felony, be transferred to an official detention facility within such State prior to his release from a Federal prison facility if—

"(1) the transfer has been requested by the Governor or other executive authority of the State;

"(2) the State has presented to the Director a certified copy of the indictment, information, or judgment of conviction; and

"(3) the Director finds that the transfer would be in the public interest.

If more than one request is presented with respect to a prisoner, the Director shall determine which request should receive preference. The expenses of such transfer shall be borne by the State requesting the transfer.

"§ 3624. Release of a prisoner

"(a) DATE OF RELEASE.—A prisoner shall be released by the Bureau of Prisons on the date of the expiration of his term of imprisonment, less any time credited toward the service of his sentence as provided in subsection (b). If the date for a prisoner's release falls on a Saturday, a Sunday, or a legal holiday at the place of confinement, the prisoner may be released by the Bureau on the last preceding weekday.

"(b) CREDIT TOWARD SERVICE OF SENTENCE FOR SATISFACTORY BEHAVIOR.—A prisoner who is serving a term of imprisonment of more than one year, other than a term of imprisonment for the duration of his life, shall receive credit toward the service of his sentence, beyond the time served, of thirty-six days at the end of each year of his term of imprisonment, beginning after the first year of the term, unless the Bureau of Prisons determines that, during that year, he has not satisfactorily complied with such institutional disciplinary regulations as have been approved by the Attorney General and issued to the prisoner. If the Bureau determines that, during that year, the prisoner has not satisfactorily complied with such institutional regulations, he shall receive no such credit toward service of his sentence or shall receive such lesser credit as the Bureau determines to be appropriate. The Bureau's determination shall be made within fifteen days after the end of each year of the sentence. Such credit toward service of sentence vests at the time that it is received. Credit that has vested may not later be withdrawn, and credit that has not been earned may not later be granted. Credit for the last year or portion of a year of the term of imprisonment shall be prorated and credited within the last six weeks of the sentence.

"(c) PRE-RELEASE CUSTODY.—The Bureau of Prisons shall, to the extent practicable, assure that a prisoner serving a term of imprisonment spends a reasonable part, not to exceed six months, of the last ten percent of the term to be served under conditions that will afford the prisoner a reasonable opportunity to adjust to and prepare for his reentry into the community. The United States Probation System shall, to the extent practicable, offer assistance to a prisoner during such pre-release custody.

"(d) ALLOTMENT OF CLOTHING, FUNDS, AND TRANSPORTATION.—Upon the release of a prisoner on the expiration of his term of imprisonment, the Bureau of Prisons shall furnish him with—

"(1) suitable clothing;

"(2) an amount of money, not more than $500, determined by the Director to be consistent with the needs of the offender and the public interest, unless the Director determines that the financial position of the offender is such that no sum should be furnished; and

"(3) transportation to the place of his conviction, to his bona fide residence within the United States, or to such other place within the United States as may be authorized by the Director.

"(e) SUPERVISION AFTER RELEASE.—A prisoner whose sentence includes a term of supervised release after imprisonment shall be released by the Bureau of Prisons to the supervision of a probation officer who shall, during the term imposed, supervise the person released to the degree warranted by the conditions specified by the sentencing court. The term of supervised release commences on the day the person is released from imprisonment. The term runs concurrently with any Federal, State, or local term of probation or supervised release or parole for another offense to which the person is subject or becomes subject during the term of supervised release, except that it does not run during any period in which the person is imprisoned, other than during limited intervals as a condition of probation or supervised release, in connection with a conviction for a Federal, State, or local crime. No prisoner shall be released on supervision unless such prisoner agrees to adhere to an installment schedule, not to exceed two years except in special circumstances, to pay for any fine imposed for the offense committed by such prisoner.

"§ 3625. Inapplicability of the Administrative Procedure Act

"The provisions of sections 554 and 555 and 701 through 706 of title 5, United States Code, do not apply to the making of any determination, decision, or order under this subchapter.";

In determining whether to revoke probation, modify the term or conditions of supervised release, or hold a defendant serving a term of supervised release in contempt, the court shall consider the defendant's employment status, earning ability, financial resources, the willfulness of the defendant's failure to pay, and any other special circumstances that may have a bearing on the defendant's ability to pay."; and

"(a) call and preside at meetings of the Commission, which shall be held for at least two weeks in each quarter after the members of the Commission hold part-time positions; and

"(b) direct—

"(1) the preparation of requests for appropriations for the Commission; and

"(2) the use of funds made available to the Commission.

"§ 994. Duties of the Commission

"(a) The Commission, by affirmative vote of at least four members of the Commission, and pursuant to its rules and regulations and consistent with all pertinent provisions of this title and title 18, United States Code, shall promulgate and distribute to all courts of the United States and to the United States Probation System—

"(1) guidelines, as described in this section, for use of a sentencing court in determining the sentence to be imposed in a criminal case, including—

"(A) a determination whether to impose a sentence to probation, a fine, or a term of imprisonment;

"(B) a determination as to the appropriate amount of a fine or the appropriate length of a term of probation or a term of imprisonment;

"(C) a determination whether a sentence to a term of imprisonment should include a requirement that the defendant be placed on a term of supervised release after imprisonment, and, if so, the appropriate length of such a term; and

"(D) a determination whether multiple sentences to terms of imprisonment should be ordered to run concurrently or consecutively;

"(2) general policy statements regarding application of the guidelines or any other aspect of sentencing or sentence implementation that in the view of the Commission would further the purposes set forth in section 3553(a)(2) of title 18, United States Code, including the appropriate use of—

"(A) the sanctions set forth in sections 3554, 3555, and 3556 of title 18;

"(B) the conditions of probation and supervised release set forth in sections 3563(b) and 3583(d) of title 18;

"(C) the sentence modification provisions set forth in sections 3563(c), 3573, and 3582(c) of title 18;

"(D) the authority granted under rule 11(e)(2) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure to accept or reject a plea agreement entered into pursuant to rule 11(e)(1); and

"(E) the temporary release provisions set forth in section 3622 of title 18, and the prerelease custody provisions set forth in section 3624(c) of title 18; and

"(3) guidelines or general policy statements regarding the appropriate use of the probation revocation provisions set forth in section 3565 of title 18, and the provisions for modification of the term or conditions of probation or supervised release set forth in sections 3563(c), 3564(d), and 3583(e) of title 18.

"(b) The Commission, in the guidelines promulgated pursuant to subsection (a)(1), shall, for each category of offense involving each category of defendant, establish a sentencing range that is consistent with all pertinent provisions of title 18, United States Code. If a sentence specified by the guidelines includes a term of imprisonment, the maximum of the range established for such a term shall not exceed the minimum of that range by more than 25 per centum.

"(c) The Commission, in establishing categories of offenses for use in the guidelines and policy statements governing the imposition of sentences of probation, a fine, or imprisonment, governing the imposition of other authorized sanctions, governing the size of a fine or the length of a term of probation, imprisonment, or supervised release, and governing the conditions of probation, supervised release, or imprisonment, shall consider whether the following matters, among others, have any relevance to the nature, extent, place of service, or other incidents of an appropriate sentence, and shall take them into account only to the extent that they do have relevance—

"(1) the grade of the offense;

"(2) the circumstances under which the offense was committed which mitigate or aggravate the seriousness of the offense;

"(3) the nature and degree of the harm caused by the offense, including whether it involved property, irreplaceable property, a person, a number of persons, or a breach of public trust;

"(4) the community view of the gravity of the offense;

"(5) the public concern generated by the offense;

"(6) the deterrent effect a particular sentence may have on the commission of the offense by others; and

"(7) the current incidence of the offense in the community and in the nation as a whole.

"(d) The Commission in establishing categories of defendants for use in the guidelines and policy statements governing the imposition of sentences of probation, a fine, or imprisonment, governing the imposition of other authorized sanctions, governing the size of a fine or the length of a term of probation, imprisonment, or supervised release, and governing the conditions of probation, supervised release, or imprisonment, shall consider whether the following matters, among others, with respect to a defendant, have any relevance to the nature, extent, place of service, or other incidents of an appropriate sentence, and shall take them into account only to the extent that they do have relevance—

"(1) age;

"(2) education;

"(3) vocational skills;

"(4) mental and emotional condition to the extent that such condition mitigates the defendant's culpability or to the extent that such condition is otherwise plainly relevant;

"(5) physical condition, including drug dependence;

"(6) previous employment record;

"(7) family ties and responsibilities;

"(8) community ties;

"(9) role in the offense;

"(10) criminal history; and

"(11) degree of dependence upon criminal activity for a livelihood.

The Commission shall assure that the guidelines and policy statements are entirely neutral as to the race, sex, national origin, creed, and socioeconomic status of offenders.

"(e) The Commission shall assure that the guidelines and policy statements, in recommending a term of imprisonment or length of a term of imprisonment, reflect the general inappropriateness of considering the education, vocational skills, employment record, family ties and responsibilities, and community ties of the defendant.

"(f) The Commission, in promulgating guidelines pursuant to subsection (a)(1), shall promote the purposes set forth in section 991(b)(1), with particular attention to the requirements of subsection 991(b)(1)(B) for providing certainty and fairness in sentencing and reducing unwarranted sentence disparities.

"(g) The Commission, in promulgating guidelines pursuant to subsection (a)(1) to meet the purposes of sentencing as set forth in section 3553(a)(2) of title 18, United States Code, shall take into account the nature and capacity of the penal, correctional, and other facilities and services available, and shall make recommendations concerning any change or expansion in the nature or capacity of such facilities and services that might become necessary as a result of the guidelines promulgated pursuant to the provisions of this chapter.

"(h) The Commission shall assure that the guidelines will specify a sentence to a term of imprisonment at or near the maximum term authorized by section 3581(b) of title 18, United States Code, for categories of defendants in which the defendant is eighteen years old or older and—

"(1) has been convicted of a felony that is—

"(A) a crime of violence; or

"(B) an offense described in section 401 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841), sections 1002(a), 1005, and 1009 of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 952(a), 955, and 959), and section 1 of the Act of September 15, 1980 (21 U.S.C. 955a); and

"(2) has previously been convicted of two or more prior felonies, each of which is—

"(A) a crime of violence; or

"(B) an offense described in section 401 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 841), sections 1002(a), 1005, and 1009 of the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. 952(a), 955, and 959), and section 1 of the Act of September 15, 1980 (21 U.S.C. 955a).

"(i) The Commission shall assure that the guidelines will specify a sentence to a substantial term of imprisonment for categories of defendants in which the defendant—

"(1) has a history of two or more prior Federal, State, or local felony convictions for offenses committed on different occasions;

"(2) committed the offense as part of a pattern of criminal conduct from which he derived a substantial portion of his income;

"(3) committed the offense in furtherance of a conspiracy with three or more persons engaging in a pattern of racketeering activity in which the defendant participated in a managerial or supervisory capacity;

"(4) committed a crime of violence that constitutes a felony while on release pending trial, sentence, or appeal from a Federal, State, or local felony for which he was ultimately convicted; or

"(5) committed a felony that is set forth in section 401 or 1010 of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 841 and 960), and that involved trafficking in a substantial quantity of a controlled substance.

"(j) The Commission shall insure that the guidelines reflect the general appropriateness of imposing a sentence other than imprisonment in cases in which the defendant is a first offender who has not been convicted of a crime of violence or an otherwise serious offense, and the general appropriateness of imposing a term of imprisonment on a person convicted of a crime of violence that results in serious bodily injury.

"(k) The Commission shall insure that the guidelines reflect the inappropriateness of imposing a sentence to a term of imprisonment for the purpose of rehabilitating the defendant or providing the defendant with needed educational or vocational training, medical care, or other correctional treatment.

"(l) The Commission shall insure that the guidelines promulgated pursuant to subsection (a)(1) reflect—

"(1) the appropriateness of imposing an incremental penalty for each offense in a case in which a defendant is convicted of—

"(A) multiple offenses committed in the same course of conduct that result in the exercise of ancillary jurisdiction over one or more of the offenses; and

"(B) multiple offenses committed at different times, including those cases in which the subsequent offense is a violation of section 3146 (penalty for failure to appear) or is committed while the person is released pursuant to the provisions of section 3147 (penalty for an offense committed while on release) of title 18; and

"(2) the general inappropriateness of imposing consecutive terms of imprisonment for an offense of conspiring to commit an offense or soliciting commission of an offense and for an offense that was the sole object of the conspiracy or solicitation.

"(m) The Commission shall insure that the guidelines reflect the fact that, in many cases, current sentences do not accurately reflect the seriousness of the offense. This will require that, as a starting point in its development of the initial sets of guidelines for particular categories of cases, the Commission ascertain the average sentences imposed in such categories of cases prior to the creation of the Commission, and in cases involving sentences to terms of imprisonment, the length of such terms actually served. The Commission shall not be bound by such average sentences, and shall independently develop a sentencing range that is consistent with the purposes of sentencing described in section 3553(a)(2) of title 18, United States Code.

"(n) The Commission periodically shall review and revise, in consideration of comments and data coming to its attention, the guidelines promulgated pursuant to the provisions of this section. In fulfilling its duties and in exercising its powers, the Commission shall consult with authorities on, and individual and institutional representatives of, various aspects of the Federal criminal justice system. The United States Probation System, the Bureau of Prisons, the Judicial Conference of the United States, the Criminal Division of the United States Department of Justice, and a representative of the Federal Public Defenders shall submit to the Commission any observations, comments, or questions pertinent to the work of the Commission whenever they believe such communication would be useful, and shall, at least annually, submit to the Commission a written report commenting on the operation of the Commission's guidelines, suggesting changes in the guidelines that appear to be warranted, and otherwise assessing the Commission's work.

"(o) The Commission, at or after the beginning of a regular session of Congress but not later than the first day of May, shall report to the Congress any amendments of the guidelines promulgated pursuant to subsection (a)(1), and a report of the reasons therefor, and the amended guidelines shall take effect one hundred and eighty days after the Commission reports them, except to the extent the effective date is enlarged or the guidelines are disapproved or modified by Act of Congress.

"(p) The Commission and the Bureau of Prisons shall submit to Congress an analysis and recommendations concerning maximum utilization of resources to deal effectively with the Federal prison population. Such report shall be based upon consideration of a variety of alternatives, including—

"(1) modernization of existing facilities;

"(2) inmate classification and periodic review of such classification for use in placing inmates in the least restrictive facility necessary to ensure adequate security; and

"(3) use of existing Federal facilities, such as those currently within military jurisdiction.

"(q) The Commission, within three years of the date of enactment of the Sentencing Reform Act of 1983, and thereafter whenever it finds it advisable, shall recommend to the Congress that it raise or lower the grades, or otherwise modify the maximum penalties, of those offenses for which such an adjustment appears appropriate.

"(r) The Commission shall give due consideration to any petition filed by a defendant requesting modification of the guidelines utilized in the sentencing of such defendant, on the basis of changed circumstances unrelated to the defendant, including changes in—

"(1) the community view of the gravity of the offense;

"(2) the public concern generated by the offense; and

"(3) the deterrent effect particular sentences may have on the commission of the offense by others.

Within one hundred and eighty days of the filing of such petition the Commission shall provide written notice to the defendant whether or not it has approved the petition. If the petition is disapproved the written notice shall contain the reasons for such disapproval. The Commission shall submit to the Congress at least annually an analysis of such written notices.

"(s) The Commission, in promulgating general policy statements regarding the sentencing modification provisions in section 3582(c)(1)(A) of title 18, shall describe what should be considered extraordinary and compelling reasons for sentence reduction, including the criteria to be applied and a list of specific examples. Rehabilitation of the defendant alone shall not be considered an extraordinary and compelling reason.

"(t) If the Commission reduces the term of imprisonment recommended in the guidelines applicable to a particular offense or category of offenses, it shall specify by what amount the sentences of prisoners serving terms of imprisonment that are outside the applicable guideline ranges for the offense may be reduced.

"(u) The Commission shall ensure that the general policy statements promulgated pursuant to subsection (a)(2) include a policy limiting consecutive terms of imprisonment for an offense involving a violation of a general prohibition and for an offense involving a violation of a specific prohibition encompassed within the general prohibition.

"(v) The appropriate judge or officer shall submit to the Commission in connection with each sentence imposed a written report of the sentence, the offense for which it is imposed, the age, race, and sex of the offender, information regarding factors made relevant by the guidelines, and such other information as the Commission finds appropriate. The Commission shall submit to Congress at least annually an analysis of these reports and any recommendations for legislation that the Commission concludes is warranted by that analysis.

"(w) The provisions of section 553 of title 5, relating to publication in the Federal Register and public hearing procedure, shall apply to the promulgation of guidelines pursuant to this section.

"§ 995. Powers of the Commission

"(a) The Commission, by vote of a majority of the members present and voting, shall have the power to—

"(1) establish general policies and promulgate such rules and regulations for the Commission as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this chapter;

"(2) appoint and fix the salary and duties of the Staff Director of the Sentencing Commission, who shall serve at the discretion of the Commission and who shall be compensated at a rate not to exceed the highest rate now or hereafter prescribed for grade 18 of the General Schedule pay rates (5 U.S.C. 5332);

"(8) request such information, data, and reports from any Federal agency or judicial officer as the Commission may from time to time require and as may be produced consistent with other law;

"(22) perform such other functions as are required to permit Federal courts to meet their responsibilities under section 3553(a) of title 18, United States Code, and to permit others involved in the Federal criminal justice system to meet their related responsibilities.

"(b) The Commission shall have such other powers and duties and shall perform such other functions as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this chapter, and may delegate to any member or designated person such powers as may be appropriate other than the power to establish general policy statements and guidelines pursuant to section 994(a) (1) and (2), the issuance of general policies and promulgation of rules and regulations pursuant to subsection (a)(1) of this section, and the decisions as to the factors to be considered in establishment of categories of offenses and offenders pursuant to section 994(b). SEC. 228. (a) Title 18 of the United States Code is amended by adding the following new chapter after chapter 227:

"CHAPTER 228—IMPOSITION, PAYMENT, AND COLLECTION OF FINES

"Sec.
"3591. Imposition of a fine.
"3592. Payment of a fine, delinquency and default.
"3593. Modification or remission of fine.
"3594. Certification and notification.
"3595. Interest, monetary penalties for delinquency, and default.
"3596. Civil remedies for satisfaction of an unpaid fine.
"3597. Resentencing upon failure to pay a fine.
"3598. Statute of limitations.
"3599. Criminal default.

"§ 3591. Imposition of a fine

"(a) FACTORS TO BE CONSIDERED IN IMPOSING A FINE.—The court, in determining whether to impose a fine, the amount of any fine, the time for payment, and the method of payment, shall consider—

"(1) the ability of the defendant to pay the fine in view of the income of the defendant, earning capacity and financial resources, and, if the defendant is an organization, the size of the organization;

"(2) the nature of the burden that payment of the fine will impose on the defendant, and on any person who is financially dependent on the defendant, relative to the burden which alternative punishments would impose;

"(3) any restitution or reparation made by the defendant in connection with the offense and any obligation imposed upon the defendant to make such restitution or reparation;

"(4) if the defendant is an organization, any measure taken by the organization to discipline its employees or agents responsible for the offense or to insure against a recurrence of such an offense; and

"(5) any other pertinent consideration.

"(b) EFFECT OF FINALITY OF JUDGMENT.—Notwithstanding the fact that a sentence to pay a fine can subsequently be—

"(1) modified or remitted pursuant to the provisions of section 3592;

"(2) corrected pursuant to the provisions of rule 35; or

"(3) appealed;

a judgment of conviction that includes such a sentence constitutes a final judgment for all other purposes.

"§ 3592. Payment of a fine, delinquency and default

"(a) TIME AND METHOD OF PAYMENT.—Payment of a fine is due immediately unless the court, at the time of sentencing—

"(1) requires payment by a date certain; or

"(2) establishes an installment schedule, the specific terms of which shall be fixed by the court.

"(b) INDIVIDUAL RESPONSIBILITIES FOR PAYMENT.—If a fine is imposed on an organization, it is the duty of each individual authorized to make disbursement of the assets of the organization to pay the fine from assets of the organization. If a fine is imposed on an agent or shareholder of an organization, the fine shall not be paid, directly or indirectly, out of the assets of the organization, unless the court finds that such payment is expressly permissible under applicable State law.

"(c) RESPONSIBILITY TO PROVIDE CURRENT ADDRESS.—At the time of imposition of the fine, the court shall order the person fined to provide the Attorney General with a current mailing address for the entire period that any part of the fine remains unpaid. Failure to provide the Attorney General with a current address or a change in address shall be punishable as a contempt of court.

"(d) STAY OF FINE PENDING APPEAL.—Unless exceptional circumstances exist, if a sentence to pay a fine is stayed pending appeal, the court granting the stay shall include in such stay—

"(1) a requirement that the defendant, pending appeal, to deposit the entire fine amount, or the amount due under an installment schedule, during the pendency of an appeal, in an escrow account in the registry of the district court, or to give bond for the payment thereof; or

"(2) an order restraining the defendant from transferrring or dissipating assets found to be sufficient, if sold, to meet the defendant's fine obligation.

"(e) DELINQUENT FINE.—A fine is delinquent if any portion of such fine is not paid within thirty days of when it is due, including any fines to be paid pursuant to an installment schedule.

"(f) DEFAULT.—A fine is in default if any portion of such fine is more than ninety days delinquent. When a criminal fine is in default, the entire amount is due with thirty days of notification of the default, notwithstanding any installment schedule.

"§ 3593. Modification or remission of fine

"(a) PETITION FOR MODIFICATION OR REMISSION.—A person who has been sentenced to pay a fine, and who—

"(1) can show a good faith effort to comply with the terms of the sentence and concerning whom the circumstances no longer exist that warranted the imposition of the fine in the amount imposed or payment by the installment schedule, may at any time petition the court for—

"(A) an extension of the installment schedule, not to exceed two years except in case of incarceration or special circumstances; or

"(B) a remission of all or part of the unpaid portion including interest and penalties; or

"(2) has voluntarily made restitution or reparation to the victim of the offense, may at any time petition the court for a remission of the unpaid portion of the fine in an amount not exceeding the amount of such restitution or reparation.

Any petition filed pursuant to this subsection shall be filed in the court in which sentence was originally imposed, unless that court transfers jurisdiction to another court. The petitioner shall notify the Attorney General that the petition has been filed within ten working days after filing. For the purposes of clause (1), unless exceptional circumstances exist, a person may be considered to have made a good faith effort to comply with the terms of the sentence only after payment of a reasonable portion of the fine.

"(b) ORDER OF MODIFICATION OR REMISSION.—If, after the filing of a petition as provided in subsection (a), the court finds that the circumstances warrant relief, the court may enter an appropriate order, in which case it shall provide the Attorney General with a copy of such order.

"§ 3594. Certification and notification

"(a) DISPOSITION OF PAYMENT.—The clerk shall forward each fine payment to the United States Treasury and shall notify the Attorney General of its receipt within ten working days.

"(b) CERTIFICATION OF IMPOSITION.—If a fine exceeding $100 is imposed, modified, or remitted, the sentencing court shall incorporate in the order imposing, remitting, and modifying such fine, and promptly certify to the Attorney General—

"(1) the name of the person fined;

"(2) his current address;

"(3) the docket number of the case;

"(4) the amount of the fine imposed;

"(5) any installment schedule;

"(6) the nature of any modification or remission of the fine or installment schedule; and

"(7) the amount of the fine that is due and unpaid.

"(c) RESPONSIBILITY FOR COLLECTION.—The Attorney General shall be responsible for collection of an unpaid fine concerning which a certification has been issued as provided in subsection (a).

"(d) NOTIFICATION OF DELINQUENCY.—Within ten working days after a fine is determined to be delinquent as provided in section 3592(e), the Attorney General shall notify the person whose fine is delinquent, by certified mail, to inform him that the fine is delinquent.

"(e) NOTIFICATION OF DEFAULT.—Within thirteen working days after a fine is determined to be in default as provided in section 3592(f), the Attorney General shall notify the person defaulting, by certified mail, to inform him that the fine is in default and the entire unpaid balance, including interest and penalties, is due within thirty days.

"§ 3595. Interest, monetary penalties for delinquency, and default

"Upon a determination of willful nonpayment, the court may impose the following interest and monetary penalties:

"(1) INTEREST.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, interest at the rate of 1 per centum per month, or 12 per centum per year, shall be charged, beginning the thirty-first day after sentencing on the first day of each month during which any fine balance remains unpaid, including sums to be paid pursuant to an installment schedule.

"(2) MONETARY PENALTIES FOR DELINQUENT FINES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a penalty sum equal to 10 per centum shall be charged for any portion of a criminal fine which has become delinquent. The Attorney General may waive all or part of the penalty for good cause.

"§ 3596. Civil remedies for satisfaction of an unpaid fine

"(a) LIEN.—A fine imposed as a sentence is a lien in favor of the United States upon all property belonging to the person fined. The lien arises at the time of the entry of the judgment and continues until the liability is satisfied, remitted, or set aside, or until it becomes unenforceable pursuant to the provisions of subsection (b). On application of the person fined, the Attorney General shall—

"(1) issue a certificate of release, as described in section 6325 of the Internal Revenue Code, of any lien imposed pursuant to this section, upon his acceptance of a bond described in section 6325(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code; or

"(2) issue a certificate of discharge, as described in section 6325 of the Internal Revenue Code, of any part of the person's property subject to a lien imposed pursuant to this section, upon his determination that the fair market value of that part of such property remaining subject to and available to satisfy the lien is at least three times the amount of the fine.

"(b) EXPIRATION OF LIEN.—A lien becomes unenforceable at the time liability to pay a fine expires as provided in section 3598.

"(c) APPLICATION OF OTHER LIEN PROVISIONS.—The provisions of sections 6323, 6331, 6334 through 6336, 6337(a), 6338 through 6343, 6901, 7402, 7403, 7424 through 7426, 7505(a), 7506, 7701, and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 6323, 6331, 6332, 6334 through 6336, 6337(a), 6338 through 6343, 6901, 7402, 7403, 7424 through 7426, 7505(a), 7506, 7701, and 7805) and of section 513 of the Act of October 17, 1940 (54 Stat. 1190), apply to a fine and to the lien imposed by subsection (a) as if the liability of the person fined were for an internal revenue tax assessment, except to the extent that the application of such statutes is modified by regulations issued by the Attorney General to accord with differences in the nature of the liabilities. For the purposes of this subsection, references in the preceding sections of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to 'the Secretary' shall be construed to mean 'the Attorney General,' and references in those sections to 'tax' shall be construed to mean 'fine.'

"(d) EFFECT ON NOTICE OF LIEN.—A notice of the lien imposed by subsection (a) shall be considered a notice of lien for taxes payable to the United States for the purposes of any State or local law providing for the filing of a notice of a tax lien. The registration, recording, docketing, or indexing, in accordance with 28 U.S.C. 1962, of the judgment under which a fine is imposed shall be considered for all purposes as the filing prescribed by section 6323(f)(1)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 6323(f)(1)(A)) and by subsection (c).

"(e) ALTERNATIVE ENFORCEMENT.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, a judgment imposing a fine may be enforced by execution against the property of the person fined in like manner as judgments in civil cases.

"(f) DISCHARGE OF DEBTS INAPPLICABLE.—No discharge of debts pursuant to a bankruptcy proceeding shall render a lien under this section unenforceable or discharge liability to pay a fine.

§ 3597. Resentencing upon failure to pay a fine

"(a) RESENTENCING.—Subject to the provisions of subsection (b), if a person knowingly fails to pay a delinquent fine the court may resentence the person to any sentence which might originally have been imposed.

"(b) IMPRISONMENT.—The defendant may be sentenced to a term of imprisonment under subsection (a) only if the court determines that—

"(1) the person willfully refused to pay the delinquent fine or had failed to make sufficient bona fide efforts to pay the fine; or

"(2) in light of the nature of the offense and the characteristics of the person, alternatives to imprisonment are not adequate to serve the purposes of punishment and deterrence.

§ 3598. Statute of limitations

"(a) LIABILITY TO PAY A FINE EXPIRES.—

"(1) twenty years after the entry of the judgment;

"(2) upon the death of the person fined.

"(b) The period set forth in subsection (a) may be extended, prior to its expiration, by a written agreement between the person fined and the Attorney General. The running of the period set forth in subsection (a) is suspended during any interval for which the running of the period of limitations for collection of a tax would be suspended pursuant to section 6503(b), 6503(c), 6503(f), 6503(i), or 7508(a)(1)(I) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (26 U.S.C. 6503(b), 6503(c), 6503(f), 6503(i), or 7508(a)(1)(I)), or section 513 of the Act of October 17, 1940 (54 Stat. 1190).

§ 3599. Criminal default

"Whoever, having been sentenced to pay a fine, willfully fails to pay the fine, shall be fined not more than twice the amount of the unpaid balance of the fine or $10,000, whichever is greater, imprisoned not more than one year, or both.".

SEC. 229. Since, due to an impending crisis in prison overcrowding, available Federal prison space must be treated as a scarce resource in the sentencing of criminal defendants;

Since, sentencing decisions should be designed to insure that prison resources are, first and foremost, reserved for those violent and serious criminal offenders who pose the most dangerous threat to society;

Since, in cases of nonviolent and nonserious offenders, the interests of society as a whole as well as individual victims of crime can continue to be served through the imposition of alternative sentences, such as restitution and community service;

Since, in the two years preceding the enactment of sentencing guidelines, Federal sentencing practice should insure that scarce prison resources are available to house violent and serious criminal offenders by the increased use of restitution, community service, and other alternative sentences in cases of nonviolent and nonserious offenders: Now, therefore, be it

Declared, That it is the sense of the Senate that in the two years preceding the enactment of the sentencing guidelines, Federal judges, in determining the particular sentence to be imposed, consider—

(1) the nature and circumstances of the offense and the history and characteristics of the defendant;

(2) the general appropriateness of imposing a sentence other than imprisonment in cases in which the defendant has not been convicted of a crime of violence or otherwise serious offense; and

(3) the general appropriateness of imposing a sentence of imprisonment in cases in which the defendant has been convicted of a crime of violence or otherwise serious offense.

"(2) has been transferred to, sold to, or deposited with, a third party;

"(3) has been placed beyond the jurisdiction of the court;

"(4) has been substantially diminished in value by any act or omission of the defendant; or

"(5) has been commingled with other property which cannot be divided without difficulty;

the court shall order the forfeiture of any other property of the defendant up to the value of any property described in paragraphs (1) through (5).

"(e)(1) Upon application of the United States, the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, require the execution of a satisfactory performance bond, or take any other action to preserve the availability of property described in subsection (a) for forfeiture under this section—

"(A) upon the filing of an indictment or information charging a violation of section 1962 of this chapter and alleging that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section; or

"(B) prior to the filing of such an indictment or information, if, after notice to persons appearing to have an interest in the property and opportunity for a hearing, the court determines that—

"(i) there is a substantial probability that the United States will prevail on the issue of forfeiture and that failure to enter the order will result in the property being destroyed, removed from the jurisdiction of the court, or otherwise made unavailable for forfeiture; and

"(ii) the need to preserve the availability of the property through the entry of the requested order outweighs the hardship on any party against whom the order is to be entered:

Provided, however, That an order entered pursuant to subparagraph (B) shall be effective for not more than ninety days, unless extended by the court for good cause shown or unless an indictment or information described in subparagraph (A) has been filed.

"(2) A temporary restraining order under this subsection may be entered upon application of the United States without notice or opportunity for a hearing when an information or indictment has not yet been filed with respect to the property, if the United States demonstrates that there is probable cause to believe that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section and that provision of notice will jeopardize the availability of the property for forfeiture. Such a temporary order shall expire not more than ten days after the date on which it is entered, unless extended for good cause shown or unless the party against whom it is entered consents to an extension for a longer period. A hearing requested concerning an order entered under this paragraph shall be held at the earliest possible time, and prior to the expiration of the temporary order.

"(3) The court may receive and consider, at a hearing held pursuant to this subsection, evidence and information that would be inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence.

"(f) Upon conviction of a person under this section, the court shall enter a judgment of forfeiture of the property to the United States and shall also authorize the Attorney General to seize all property ordered forfeited upon such terms and conditions as the court shall deem proper. Following the entry of an order declaring the property forfeited, the court may, upon application of the United States, enter such appropriate restraining orders or injunctions, require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds, appoint receivers, conservators, appraisers, accountants, or trustees, or take any other action to protect the interest of the United States in the property ordered forfeited. Any income accruing to, or derived from, an enterprise or an interest in an enterprise which has been ordered forfeited under this section may be used to offset ordinary and necessary expenses to the enterprise which are required by law, or which are necessary to protect the interests of the United States or third parties.

"(g) Following the seizure of property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General shall direct the disposition of the property by sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of any innocent persons. Any property right or interest not exercisable by, or transferable for value to, the United States shall expire and shall not revert to the defendant, nor shall the defendant or any person acting in concert with or on behalf of the defendant be eligible to purchase forfeited property at any sale held by the United States. Upon application of a person, other than the defendant or a person acting in concert with or on behalf of the defendant, the court may restrain or stay the sale or disposition of the property pending the conclusion of any appeal of the criminal case giving rise to the forfeiture, if the applicant demonstrates that proceeding with the sale or disposition of the property will result in irreparable injury, harm or loss to him. Notwithstanding 31 U.S.C. 3302(b), the proceeds of any sale or other disposition of property forfeited under this section and any moneys forfeited shall be used to pay all proper expenses for the forfeiture and the sale, including expenses of seizure, maintenance and custody of the property pending its disposition, advertising and court costs. The Attorney General shall deposit in the Treasury any amounts of such proceeds or moneys remaining after the payment of such expenses.

"(h) With respect to property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General is authorized to—

"(1) grant petitions for mitigation or remission of forfeiture, restore forfeited property to victims of a violation of this chapter, or take any other action to protect the rights of innocent persons which is in the interest of justice and which is not inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter;

"(2) compromise claims arising under this section;

"(3) award compensation to persons providing information resulting in a forfeiture under this section;

"(4) direct the disposition by the United States of all property ordered forfeited under this section by public sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of innocent persons; and

"(5) take appropriate measures necessary to safeguard and maintain property ordered forfeited under this section pending its disposition.

"(i) The Attorney General may promulgate regulations with respect to—

"(1) making reasonable efforts to provide notice to persons who may have an interest in property ordered forfeited under this section;

"(2) granting petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture;

"(3) the restitution of property to victims of an offense petitioning for remission or mitigation of forfeiture under this chapter;

"(4) the disposition by the United States of forfeited property by public sale or other commercially feasible means;

"(5) the maintenance and safekeeping of any property forfeited under this section pending its disposition; and

"(6) the compromise of claims arising under this chapter.

Pending the promulgation of such regulations, all provisions of law relating to the disposition of property, or the proceeds from the sale thereof, or the remission or mitigation of forfeitures for violation of the customs laws, and the compromise of claims and the award of compensation to informers in respect of such forfeitures shall apply to forfeitures incurred, or alleged to have been incurred, under the provisions of this section, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with the provisions hereof. Such duties as are imposed upon the Customs Service or any person with respect to the disposition of property under the customs law shall be performed under this chapter by the Attorney General.

"(j) Except as provided in subsection (m), no party claiming an interest in property subject to forfeiture under this section may—

"(1) intervene in a trial or appeal of a criminal case involving the forfeiture of such property under this section; or

"(2) commence an action at law or equity against the United States concerning the validity of his alleged interest in the property subsequent to the filing of an indictment or information alleging that the property is subject to forfeiture under this section.

"(k) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to enter orders as provided in this section without regard to the location of any property which may be subject to forfeiture under this section or which has been ordered forfeited under this section.

"(l) In order to facilitate the identification or location of property declared forfeited and to facilitate the disposition of petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, after the entry of an order declaring property forfeited to the United States the court may, upon application of the United States, order that the testimony of any witness relating to the property forfeited be taken by deposition and that any designated book, paper, document, record, recording, or other material not privileged be produced at the same time and place, in the same manner as provided for the taking of depositions under Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"(m)(1) Following the entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the United States shall publish notice of the order and of its intent to dispose of the property for at least seven successive court days in such manner as the Attorney General may direct. The Government may also, to the extent practicable, provide direct written notice to any person known to have alleged an interest in the property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture as a substitute for published notice as to those persons so notified.

"(2) Any person, other than the defendant, asserting a legal interest in property which has been ordered forfeited to the United States pursuant to this section may, within thirty days of the final publication of notice or his receipt of notice under paragraph (1), whichever is earlier, petition the court for a hearing to adjudicate the validity of his alleged interest in the property. The hearing shall be held before the court alone, without a jury.

"(3) The petition shall be signed by the petitioner under penalty of perjury and shall set forth the nature and extent of the petitioner's right, title, or interest in the property, the time and circumstances of the petitioner's acquisition of the right, title, or interest in the property, any additional facts supporting the petitioner's claim, and the relief sought.

"(4) The hearing on the petition shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the interests of justice, be held within thirty days of the filing of the petition. The court may consolidate the hearing on the petition with a hearing on any other petition filed by a person other than the defendant under this subsection.

"(5) At the hearing, the petitioner may testify and present evidence and witnesses on his own behalf, and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. The United States may present evidence and witnesses in rebuttal and in defense of its claim to the property and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. In addition to testimony and evidence presented at the hearing, the court shall consider the relevant portions of the record of the criminal case which resulted in the order of forfeiture.

"(6) If, after the hearing, the court determines that the petitioner has established by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(A) the petitioner has a legal right, title, or interest in the property, and such right, title, or interest renders the order of forfeiture invalid in whole or in part because the right, title, or interest was vested in the petitioner rather than the defendant or was superior to any right, title, or interest of the defendant at the time of the commission of the acts which gave rise to the forfeiture of the property under this section; or

"(B) the petitioner is a bona fide purchaser for value of the right, title, or interest in the property and was at the time of purchase reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section;

the court shall amend the order of forfeiture in accordance with its determination.

"(7) Following the court's disposition of all petitions filed under this subsection, or if no such petitions are filed following the expiration of the period provided in paragraph (2) for the filing of such petitions, the United States shall have clear title to property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture and may warrant good title to any subsequent purchaser or transferee.".

PART B

SEC. 303. Part D of title II of the Comprehensive Drug Abuse Prevention and Control Act of 1970 (21 U.S.C. 841 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections 413 and 414:

"CRIMINAL FORFEITURES

"PROPERTY SUBJECT TO CRIMINAL FORFEITURE

"SEC. 413. (a) Any person convicted of a violation of this title or title III punishable by imprisonment for more than one year shall forfeit to the United States, irrespective of any provision of State law—

"(1) any property constituting, or derived from, any proceeds the person obtained, directly or indirectly, as the result of such violation;

"(2) any of the person's property used, or intended to be used, in any manner or part, to commit, or to facilitate the commission of, such violation; and

"(3) in the case of a person convicted of engaging in a continuing criminal enterprise in violation of section 408 of this title (21 U.S.C. 848), the person shall forfeit, in addition to any property described in paragraph (1) or (2), any of his interest in, claims against, and property or contractual rights affording a source of control over, the continuing criminal enterprise.

The court, in imposing sentence on such person, shall order, in addition to any other sentence imposed pursuant to this title or title III, that the person forfeit to the United States all property described in this subsection.

"MEANING OF TERM 'PROPERTY'

"(b) Property subject to criminal forfeiture under this section includes—

"(1) real property, including things growing on, affixed to, and found in land; and

"(2) tangible and intangible personal property, including rights, privileges, interests, claims, and securities.

"THIRD PARTY TRANSFERS

"(c) All right, title, and interest in property described in subsection (a) vests in the United States upon the commission of the act giving rise to forfeiture under this section. Any such property that is subsequently transferred to a person other than the defendant may be the subject of a special verdict of forfeiture and thereafter shall be ordered forfeited to the United States, unless the transferee establishes in a hearing pursuant to subsection (o) that he is a bona fide purchaser for value of such property who at the time of purchase was reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forefeiture under this section.

"(d) If any of the property described in subsection (a)—

"(1) cannot be located;

"(2) has been transferred to, sold to, or deposited with a third party;

"(3) has been placed beyond the jurisdiction of the court;

"(4) has been substantially diminished in value by any act or omission of the defendant; or

"(5) has been commingled with other property which cannot be divided without difficulty;

the court shall order the forfeiture of any other property of the defendant up to the value of any property described in paragraphs (1) through (5).

"REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION

"(e) There is a rebuttable presumption at trial that any property of a person convicted of a felony under this title or title III is subject to forfeiture under this section if the United States establishes by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(1) such property was acquired by such person during the period of the violation of this title or title III or within a reasonable time after such period; and

"(2) there was no likely source for such property other than the violation of this title or title III.

"PROTECTIVE ORDERS

"(f)(1) Upon application of the United States, the court may enter a restraining order or injunction, require the execution of a satisfactory performance bond, or take any other action to preserve the availability of property described in subsection (a) for forfeiture under this section—

"(A) upon the filing of an indictment or information charging a violation of this title or title III for which criminal forfeiture may be ordered under this section and alleging that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section; or

"(B) prior to the filing of such an indictment or information, if, after notice to persons appearing to have an interest in the property and opportunity for a hearing, the court determines that—

"(i) there is a substantial probability that the United States will prevail on the issue of forfeiture and that failure to enter the order will result in the property being destroyed, removed from the jurisdiction of the court, or otherwise made unavailable for forfeiture; and

"(ii) the need to preserve the availability of the property through the entry of the requested order outweighs the hardship on any party against whom the order is to be entered:

Provided, however, That an order entered pursuant to subparagraph (B) shall be effective for not more than ninety days, unless extended by the court for good cause shown or unless an indictment or information described in subparagraph (A) has been filed.

"(2) A temporary restraining order under this subsection may be entered upon application of the United States without notice or opportunity for a hearing when an information or indictment has not yet been filed with respect to the property, if the United States demonstrates that there is probable cause to believe that the property with respect to which the order is sought would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture under this section and that provision of notice will jeopardize the availability of the property for forfeiture. Such a temporary order shall expire not more than ten days after the date on which it is entered, unless extended for good cause shown or unless the party against whom it is entered consents to an extension for a longer period. A hearing requested concerning an order entered under this paragraph shall be held at the earliest possible time and prior to the expiration of the temporary order.

"(3) The court may receive and consider, at a hearing held pursuant to this subsection, evidence and information that would be inadmissible under the Federal Rules of Evidence.

"WARRANT OF SEIZURE

"(g) The Government may request the issuance of a warrant authorizing the seizure of property subject to forfeiture under this section in the same manner as provided for a search warrant. If the court determines that there is probable cause to believe that the property to be seized would, in the event of conviction, be subject to forfeiture and that an order under subsection (f) may not be sufficient to assure the availability of the property for forfeiture, the court shall issue a warrant authorizing the seizure of such property.

"EXECUTION

"(h) Upon entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the court shall authorize the Attorney General to seize all property ordered forfeited upon such terms and conditions as the court shall deem proper. Following entry of an order declaring the property forfeited, the court may, upon application of the United States, enter such appropriate restraining orders or injunctions, require the execution of satisfactory performance bonds, appoint receivers, conservators, appraisers, accountants, or trustees, or take any other action to protect the interest of the United States in the property ordered forfeited. Any income accruing to or derived from property ordered forfeited under this section may be used to offset ordinary and necessary expenses to the property which are required by law, or which are necessary to protect the interests of the United States or third parties.

"DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY

"(i) Following the seizure of property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General shall direct the disposition of the property by sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of any innocent persons. Any property right or interest not exercisable by, or transferable for value to, the United States shall expire and shall not revert to the defendant, nor shall the defendant or any person acting in concert with him or on his behalf be eligible to purchase forfeited property at any sale held by the United States. Upon application of a person, other than the defendant or a person acting in concert with him or on his behalf, the court may restrain or stay the sale or disposition of the property pending the conclusion of any appeal of the criminal case giving rise to the forfeiture, if the applicant demonstrates that proceeding with the sale or disposition of the property will result in irreparable injury, harm, or loss to him.

"AUTHORITY OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

"(j) With respect to property ordered forfeited under this section, the Attorney General is authorized to—

"(1) grant petitions for mitigation or remission of forfeiture, restore forfeited property to victims of a violation of this chapter, or take any other action to protect the rights of innocent persons which is in the interest of justice and which is not inconsistent with the provisions of this section;

"(2) compromise claims arising under this section;

"(3) award compensation to persons providing information resulting in a forfeiture under this section;

"(4) direct the disposition by the United States, in accordance with the provisions of section 511(e) of this title (21 U.S.C. 881(e)), of all property ordered forfeited under this section by public sale or any other commercially feasible means, making due provision for the rights of innocent persons; and

"(5) take appropriate measures necessary to safeguard and maintain property ordered forfeited under this section pending its disposition.

"APPLICABILITY OF CIVIL FORFEITURE PROVISIONS

"(k) Except to the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions of this section, the provisions of section 511(d) of this title (21 U.S.C. 881(d)) shall apply to a criminal forfeiture under this section.

"BAR ON INTERVENTION

"(l) Except as provided in subsection (o), no party claiming an interest in property subject to forfeiture under this section may—

"(1) intervene in a trial or appeal of a criminal case involving the forfeiture of such property under this section; or

"(2) commence an action at law or equity against the United States concerning the validity of his alleged interest in the property subsequent to the filing of an indictment or information alleging that the property is subject to forfeiture under this section.

"JURISDICTION TO ENTER ORDERS

"(m) The district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction to enter orders as provided in this section without regard to the location of any property which may be subject to forfeiture under this section or which has been ordered forfeited under this section.

"DEPOSITIONS

"(n) In order to facilitate the identification and location of property declared forfeited and to facilitate the disposition of petitions for remission or mitigation of forfeiture, after the entry of an order declaring property forfeited to the United States, the court may, upon application of the United States, order that the testimony of any witness relating to the property forfeited be taken by deposition and that any designated book, paper, document, record, recording, or other material not privileged be produced at the same time and place, in the same manner as provided for the taking of depositions under Rule 15 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

"THIRD PARTY INTERESTS

"(o)(1) Following the entry of an order of forfeiture under this section, the United States shall publish notice of the order and of its intent to dispose of the property for at least seven successive court days in such manner as the Attorney General may direct. The Government may also, to the extent practicable, provide direct written notice to any person known to have alleged an interest in the property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture as a substitute for published notice as to those persons so notified.

"(2) Any person, other than the defendant, asserting a legal interest in property which has been ordered forfeited to the United States pursuant to this section may, within thirty days of the final publication of notice or his receipt of notice under paragraph (1), whichever is earlier, petition the court for a hearing to adjudicate the validity of his alleged interest in the property. The hearing shall be held before the court alone, without a jury.

"(3) The petition shall be signed by the petitioner under penalty of perjury and shall set forth the nature and extent of the petitioner's right, title, or interest in the property, the time and circumstances of the petitioner's acquisition of the right, title, or interest in the property, any additional facts supporting the petitioner's claim, and the relief sought.

"(4) The hearing on the petition shall, to the extent practicable and consistent with the interests of justice, be held within thirty days of the filing of the petition. The court may consolidate the hearing on the petition with a hearing on any other petition filed by a person other than the defendant under this subsection.

"(5) At the hearing, the petitioner may testify and present evidence and witnesses on his own behalf, and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. The United States may present evidence and witnesses in rebuttal and in defense of its claim to the property and cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing. In addition to testimony and evidence presented at the hearing, the court shall consider the relevant portions of the record of the criminal case which resulted in the order of forfeiture.

"(6) If, after the hearing, the court determines that the petitioner has established by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(A) the petitioner has a legal right, title, or interest in the property, and such right, title, or interest renders the order of forfeiture invalid in whole or in part because the right, title, or interest was vested in the petitioner rather than the defendant or was superior to any right, title, or interest of the defendant at the time of the commission of the acts which gave rise to the forfeiture of the property under this section; or

"(B) the petitioner is a bona fide purchaser for value of the right, title, or interest in the property and was at the time of purchase reasonably without cause to believe that the property was subject to forfeiture under this section;

the court shall amend the order of forfeiture in accordance with its determination.

"(7) Following the court's disposition of all petitions filed under this subsection, or if no such petitions are filed following the expiration of the period provided in paragraph

(2) for the filing of such petitions, the United States shall have clear title to property that is the subject of the order of forfeiture and may warrant good title to any subsequent purchaser or transferee.".

"(p) The provisions of this section shall be liberally construed to effectuate its remedial purposes.".

A purchase of securities on the open market for purposes of investment, and without the intention of controlling or participating in the control of the issuer, or of assisting another to do so, shall not be unlawful under this section if the securities of the issuer held by the purchaser, the members of his immediate family, and his or their accomplices in any violation of this title or title III after such purchase do not amount in the aggregate to one percent of the outstanding securities of any one class, and do not confer, either in law or in fact, the power to elect one or more directors of the issuer.

"(b) Whoever violates this section shall be fined not more than $50,000 or imprisoned not more than ten years, or both.

Mental disease or defect does not otherwise constitute a defense.

"(b) BURDEN OF PROOF.—The defendant has the burden of proving the defense of insanity by clear and convincing evidence.".

"(b) The sectional analysis of chapter 1 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to add the following new section 20:

"20. Insanity Defense.".

SEC. 403. (a) Chapter 313 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"CHAPTER 313—OFFENDERS WITH MENTAL DISEASE OR DEFECT

"Sec.

"4241. Determination of mental competency to stand trial.
"4242. Determination of the existence of insanity at the time of the offense.
"4243. Hospitalization of a person found not guilty only by reason of insanity.
"4244. Hospitalization of a convicted person suffering from mental disease or defect.
"4245. Hospitalization of an imprisoned person suffering from mental disease or defect.
"4246. Hospitalization of a person due for release but suffering from mental disease or defect.
"4247. General provisions for chapter.

"§ 4241. Determination of mental competency to stand trial

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE COMPETENCY OF DEFENDANT.—At any time after the commencement of a prosecution for an offense and prior to the sentencing of the defendant, the defendant or the attorney for the government may file a motion for a hearing to determine the mental competency of the defendant. The court shall grant the motion, or shall order such a hearing on its own motion, if there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect rendering him mentally incompetent to the extent that he is unable to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him or to assist properly in his defense, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for treatment in a suitable facility—

"(1) for such a reasonable period of time, not to exceed four months, as is necessary to determine whether there is a substantial probability that in the foreseeable future he will attain the capacity to permit the trial to proceed; and

"(2) for an additional reasonable period of time until—

"(A) his mental condition is so improved that trial may proceed, if the court finds that there is a substantial probability that within such additional period of time he will attain the capacity to permit the trial to proceed; or

"(B) the pending charges against him are disposed of according to law;

whichever is earlier.

If, at the end of the time period specified, it is determined that the defendant's mental condition has not so improved as to permit the trial to proceed, the defendant is subject to the provisions of section 4246.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which a defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered to such an extent that he is able to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him and to assist properly in his defense, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine the competency of the defendant. If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant has recovered to such an extent that he is able to understand the nature and consequences of the proceedings against him and to assist properly in his defense, the court shall order his immediate discharge from the facility in which he is hospitalized and shall set the date for trial. Upon discharge, the defendant is subject to the provisions of chapter 207.

"(f) ADMISSIBILITY OF FINDING OF COMPETENCY.—A finding by the court that the defendant is mentally competent to stand trial shall not prejudice the defendant in raising the issue of his insanity as a defense to the offense charged, and shall not be admissible as evidence in a trial for the offense charged.

"§ 4242. Determination of the existence of insanity at the time of the offense

"(a) MOTION FOR PRETRIAL PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION.—Upon the filing of a notice, as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, that the defendant intends to rely on the defense of insanity, the court, upon motion of the attorney for the government, shall order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(b) SPECIAL VERDICT.—If the issue of insanity is raised by notice as provided in Rule 12.2 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure on motion of the defendant or of the attorney for the government, or on the court's own motion, the jury shall be instructed to find, or, in the event of a nonjury trial, the court shall find the defendant—

"(1) guilty;

"(2) not guilty; or

"(3) not guilty only by reason of insanity.

"§ 4243. Hospitalization of a person found not guilty only by reason of insanity

"(a) DETERMINATION OF PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF ACQUITTED PERSON.—If a person is found not guilty only by reason of insanity at the time of the offense charged, he shall be committed to a suitable facility until such time as he is eligible for release pursuant to subsection (e).

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, pursuant to subsection (c), the court shall order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—A hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d) and shall take place not later than forty days following the special verdict.

"(d) BURDEN OF PROOF.—In a hearing pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, a person found not guilty only by reason of insanity of an offense involving bodily injury to, or serious damage to the property of, another person, or involving a substantial risk of such injury or damage, has the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that his release would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage of property of another due to a present mental disease or defect. With respect to any other offense, the person has the burden of such proof by a preponderance of the evidence.

"(e) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court fails to find by the standard specified in subsection (d) of this section that the person's release would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage of property of another due to a present mental disease or defect, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the State in which the person is domiciled or was tried if such State will assume responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment. The Attorney General shall make all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility. If, notwithstanding such efforts, neither such State will assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable facility until—

"(1) such a State will assume such responsibility; or

"(2) the person's mental condition is such that his release, or his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another;

whichever is earlier. The Attorney General shall continue periodically to exert all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility for the person's custody, care, and treatment.

"(f) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which an acquitted person is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (e) determines that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release, or his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall order the discharge of the acquitted person or, on the motion of the attorney for the government or on its own motion, shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine whether he should be released. If, after the hearing, the court finds by the standard specified in subsection (d) that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that—

"(1) his release would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall order that he be immediately discharged; or

"(2) his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall—

"(A) order that he be conditionally discharged under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment that has been prepared for him, that has been certified to the court as appropriate by the director of the facility in which he is committed, and that has been found by the court to be appropriate; and

"(B) order, as an explicit condition of release, that he comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

The court at any time may, after a hearing employing the same criteria, modify or eliminate the regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment.

"(g) REVOCATION OF CONDITIONAL DISCHARGE.—The director of a medical facility responsible for administering a regimen imposed on an acquitted person conditionally discharged under subsection (f) shall notify the Attorney General and the court having jurisidiction over the person of any failure of the person to comply with the regimen. Upon such notice, or upon other probable cause to believe that the person has failed to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, the person may be arrested, and, upon arrest, shall be taken without unnecessary delay before the court having jurisdiction over him. The court shall, after a hearing, determine whether the person should be remanded to a suitable facility on the ground that, in light of his failure to comply with the prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment, his continued release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another.

"§ 4244. Hospitalization of a convicted person suffering from mental disease or defect

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF CONVICTED DEFENDANT.—A defendant found guilty of an offense, or the attorney for the government, may, within ten days after the defendant is found guilty, and prior to the time the defendant is sentenced, file a motion for a hearing on the present mental condition of the defendant if the motion is supported by substantial information indicating that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility. The court shall grant the motion, or at any time prior to the sentencing of the defendant shall order such a hearing on its own motion, if it is of the opinion that there is reasonable cause to believe that the defendant may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c). In addition to the information required to be included in the psychiatric or psychological report pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(c), if the report includes an opinion by the examiners that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect but that it is not such as to require his custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility, the report shall also include an opinion by the examiner concerning the sentencing alternatives that could best accord the defendant the kind of treatment he does need.

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect and that he should, in lieu of being sentenced to imprisonment, be committed to a suitable facility for care or treatment, the court shall commit the defendant to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the defendant for care or treatment in a suitable facility. Such a commitment constitutes a provisional sentence of imprisonment to the maximum term authorized by law for the offense for which the defendant was found guilty.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which the defendant is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the defendant has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of custody for care or treatment in such a facility, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the defendant's counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the time of the filing of the certificate, the provisional sentence imposed pursuant to subsection (d) has not expired, the court shall proceed finally to sentencing and may modify the provisional sentence.

"§ 4245. Hospitalization of an imprisoned person suffering from mental disease or defect

"(a) MOTION TO DETERMINE PRESENT MENTAL CONDITION OF IMPRISONED PERSON.—If a person serving a sentence of imprisonment objects either in writing or through his attorney to being transferred to a suitable facility for care or treatment, an attorney for the government, at the request of the director of the facility in which the person is imprisoned, may file a motion with the court for the district in which the facility is located for a hearing on the present mental condition of the person. The court shall grant the motion if there is reasonable cause to believe that the person may presently be suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility. A motion filed under this subsection shall stay the transfer of the person pending completion of procedures contained in this section.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the person may be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect for the treatment of which he is in need of custody for care or treatment in a suitable facility, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable facility until he is no longer in need of such custody for care or treatment or until the expiration of the sentence of imprisonment, whichever occurs earlier.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which the person is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that he is no longer in need of custody for care or treatment in such a facility, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel and to the attorney for the government. If, at the time of the filing of the certificate, the term of imprisonment imposed upon the person has not expired, the court shall order that the person be reimprisoned until the expiration of his sentence of imprisonment.

"§ 4246. Hospitalization of a person due for release but suffering from mental disease or defect

"(a) INSTITUTION OF PROCEEDING.—If the director of a facility in which a person is hospitalized certifies that a person whose sentence is about to expire, or who has been committed to the custody of the Attorney General pursuant to section 4241(d), or against whom all criminal charges have been dismissed solely for reasons related to the mental condition of the person, is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, and that suitable arrangements for State custody and care of the person are not available, he shall transmit the certificate to the clerk of the court for the district in which the person is confined. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person, and to the attorney for the government, and, if the person was committed pursuant to section 4241(d), to the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The court shall order a hearing to determine whether the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another. A certificate filed under this subsection shall stay the release of the person pending completion of procedures contained in this section.

"(b) PSYCHIATRIC OR PSYCHOLOGICAL EXAMINATION AND REPORT.—Prior to the date of the hearing, the court may order that a psychiatric or psychological examination of the defendant be conducted, and that a psychiatric or psychological report be filed with the court, pursuant to the provisions of section 4247 (b) and (c).

"(c) HEARING.—The hearing shall be conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d).

"(d) DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION.—If, after the hearing, the court finds by clear and convincing evidence that the person is presently suffering from a mental disease or defect as a result of which his release would create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall commit the person to the custody of the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall release the person to the appropriate official of the State in which the person is domiciled or was tried if such State will assume responsibility for his custody, care, and treatment. The Attorney General shall make all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility. If, notwithstanding such efforts, neither such State will assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall hospitalize the person for treatment in a suitable facility, until—

"(1) such a State will assume such responsibility; or

"(2) the person's mental condition is such that his release, or his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment would not create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another;

whichever is earlier. The Attorney General shall continue periodically to exert all reasonable efforts to cause such a State to assume such responsibility for the person's custody, care, and treatment.

"(e) DISCHARGE.—When the director of the facility in which a person is hospitalized pursuant to subsection (d) determines that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that his release would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, he shall promptly file a certificate to that effect with the clerk of the court that ordered the commitment. The clerk shall send a copy of the certificate to the person's counsel and to the attorney for the government. The court shall order the discharge of the person or, on the motion of the attorney for the government or on its own motion, shall hold a hearing, conducted pursuant to the provisions of section 4247(d), to determine whether he should be released. If, after the hearing, the court finds by a preponderance of the evidence that the person has recovered from his mental disease or defect to such an extent that—

"(1) his release would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall order that he be immediately discharged; or

"(2) his conditional release under a prescribed regimen of medical, psychiatric, or psychological care or treatment would no longer create a substantial risk of bodily injury to another person or serious damage to property of another, the court shall—

If neither such State will assume such responsibility, the Attorney General shall release the person upon receipt of notice from the State that it will not assume such responsibility, but not later than 10 days after certification by the director of the facility.

"3522. Reimbursement of expenses.
"3523. Penalty for wrongful disclosure.
"3524. Definition for chapter.

"§ 3521. Witness relocation and protection

"(a) RELOCATION.—The Attorney General may provide for the relocation or protection of a government witness in an official proceeding concerning an organized criminal activity or other serious offense if the Attorney General determines that an offense described in section 1512 or 1513, or a State or local offense that is similar in nature or that involves a crime of violence directed at a witness, is likely to be committed. The Attorney General may also provide for the relocation or protection of the immediate family of, or a person otherwise closely associated with, such witness or potential witness if the family or person may also be endangered. The Attorney General shall issue guidelines defining the types of cases for which the exercise of authority of the Attorney General contained in this subsection would be appropriate. Before providing protection to any person under this chapter, the Attorney General shall—

"(1) to the extent practicable, obtain and consider information relating to the suitability of the person for inclusion in the program, including the criminal history, if any, and a psychological evaluation of, the person;

"(2) make a written assessment in each case of the seriousness of the investigation or case in which the person's information or testimony has been or will be provided, and the possible risk of danger to persons and property in the community where the person is to be relocated; and

"(3) determine that the need for such protection outweighs the risk of danger to the public.

Neither the United States nor the Attorney General shall be subject to civil liability on account of a decision to provide protection under this chapter.

"(b) RELATED PROTECTIVE MEASURES.—In connection with the relocation or protection of a witness, a potential witness, or an immediate family member or close associate of a witness or potential witness, the Attorney General may take any action he determines to be necessary to protect such person from bodily injury, and otherwise to assure his health, safety, and welfare, for as long as, in the judgment of the Attorney General, such danger exists. "(3) provide for the transportation of household furniture and other personal property to the new residence of the person relocated;

"(4) provide a tax free subsistence payment, in a sum established in regulations issued by the Attorney General, for such times as the Attorney General determines to be warranted;

"(5) assist the person relocated in obtaining employment; and

"(6) disclose or refuse to disclose the identity or location of the person relocated or protected, or any other matter concerning the person or the program after weighing the danger such a disclosure would pose to the person, the detriment it would cause to the general effectiveness of the program, and the benefit it would afford to the public or to the person seeking the disclosure, except that the Attorney General shall, upon the request of State or local law enforcement officials, promptly disclose to such officials the identity and location, criminal records, fingerprints, and other relevant information relating to the person relocated or protected when it appears that the person is under investigation for or has been arrested for or charged with an offense that is punishable by more than one year in prison or that is a crime of violence. The Attorney General shall establish an accurate and effective system of records concerning the criminal history of persons provided protection under this chapter in order to provide the information described in this paragraph.

"(c) CIVIL ACTION AGAINST A RELOCATED PERSON.—Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b)(6), if a person relocated under this section is named as a defendant in a civil cause of action, arising prior to the person's relocation, for damages resulting from bodily injury, property damage, or injury to business, process in the civil proceeding may be served upon the Attorney General. The Attorney General shall make reasonable efforts to serve a copy of the process upon the person relocated at his last known address. If a judgment in such an action is entered against the person relocated, the Attorney General shall determine whether the person has made reasonable efforts to comply with the provisions of that judgment. The Attorney General shall take affirmative steps to urge the person relocated to comply with any judgment rendered. If the Attorney General determines that the person has not made reasonable efforts to comply with the provisions of the judgment, he may, in his discretion, after weighing the danger to the person relocated, disclose the identity and location of that person to the plaintiff entitled to recovery pursuant to the judgment. Any such disclosure shall be made upon the express condition that further disclosure by the plaintiff of such identity or location may be made only if essential to the plaintiff's efforts to recover under the judgment, and only to such additional persons as is necessary to effect the recovery. Any such disclosure or nondisclosure by the Attorney General shall not subject the government to liability in any action based upon the consequences thereof.

"(d) ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT IN CIVIL ACTION BY SPECIAL MASTER.—(1) Anytime one hundred twenty days after a decision by the Attorney General to deny disclosure of the current identity and location of a person provided protection under this chapter to any person who holds a judicial order or judgment for money or damages entered by a Federal or State court in his favor against the protected person, the person who holds the judicial order or judgment for money or damages shall have standing to petition the United States district court in the district where the petitioner resides for appointment of a special master. The United States district court in the district where the petitioner resides shall have jurisdiction over actions brought under this subsection.

"(2) (A) Upon a determination that—

"(i) the petitioner holds a Federal or State judicial order or judgment; and

"(B) The clerk of the court shall promptly furnish the master appointed pursuant to clause (A) with a copy of the order of appointment. The Attorney General shall disclose to the master the current identity and location of such protected person and any other information necessary to enable the master to carry out his duties under this subsection. It is the responsibility of the court to assure that the master proceeds with all reasonable diligence and dispatch to enforce the rights of the petitioner.

"(3) It is the duty of the master to—

"(A) proceed with all reasonable diligence and dispatch to enforce the rights of the petitioner; and

"(B) to carry out his enforcement duties in a manner that minimizes, to the extent practicable, the safety and security of the protected person.

The master may disclose to State or Federal court judges, to the extent necessary to affect the judgment, the new identity or location of the protected person. In no other cases shall the master disclose the new identity or location of the protected person without permission of the Attorney General. Any good faith disclosure made by the master in the performance of his duties under this subsection shall not create civil liability against the United States.

"(4) Upon appointment, the master shall have the power to take any action with respect to the judgment or order which the petitioner could take including the initiation of judicial enforcement actions in any Federal or State court or the assignment of such enforcement actions to a third party under applicable Federal or State law.

"(5) The costs of the action authorized by this subsection and the compensation to be allowed to a master shall be fixed by the court and shall be apportioned among the parties as follows:

"(A) the petitioner shall be assessed in the amount he would have paid to collect on his judgment in an action not arising under the provisions of this section; and

"(B) the protected person shall be assessed the costs which are normally charged to debtors in similar actions and any other costs which are incurred as a result of an action brought pursuant to this section.

In the event that the costs and compensation to the master are not met by the petitioner or protected person, the court may, in its discretion, enter judgment against the United States for costs and fees reasonably incurred as a result of an action brought pursuant to this section.

"(e) RESOLUTION OF COMPLAINTS OR GRIEVANCES.—The Attorney General shall establish guidelines and procedures for the resolution of complaints or grievances of persons provided protection under this chapter regarding the administration of the program.

"§ 3522. Reimbursement of expenses

"The provision of transportation, housing, subsistence, or other assistance to a person under section 3521 may be conditioned by the Attorney General upon reimbursement of expenses in whole or in part to the United States by a State or local government.

"§ 3523. Penalty for Wrongful Disclosure

"Whoever without the authorization of the Attorney General, knowingly discloses any information received from the Attorney General under section 3521(b)(6) shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to lay the motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the title to the desk and ask the clerk to report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Amend the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill entitled the 'Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984'."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I take this opportunity to thank the Senators here for their fine support of this bill.

I especially wish to express my appreciation to Senator BIDEN, the ranking minority member of the committee, who worked with us for several years to bring this package to the floor.

Senator KENNEDY of Massachusetts also is to be commended. He worked hard on the sentencing provision of this bill and I wish to thank him.

I thank Senator GOLDWATER for his excellent work here in connection with the Metzenbaum amendment. He did a very fine job in connection with that. I also appreciate the outstanding assistance given to us by Victoria Toensing, chief counsel of the Committee on Intelligence, in successfully dealing with this amendment.

I thank Senator LAXALT, likewise, who was of great assistance on the Laxalt amendments and on the entire package. Senator LAXALT is chairman of the Criminal Law Subcommittee and he did an outstanding job on this matter.

I express my appreciation to Senator HATCH who has been a consistent strong supporter of crime legislation, particularly with respect to bail reform. He was with us awhile today to speak against the Metzenbaum amendment and rendered a good service.

Mr. President, we could not have gotten this package passed if it had not been for the able majority leader, Senator BAKER. He handled this matter in an exemplary fashion. We are very grateful to him.

I wish I could thank everyone here, all the Senators for what they did. The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SPECTER), who is the present occupant of the chair, worked hard on this package, and there were many others.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me less than a half-minute?

Mr. THURMOND. I yield.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I highly commend the chairman of the Judiciary Committee and thank him, and also thank the Senator from Delaware for the excellent work they have done, and thank the dozens of others. I have not contributed anything. But in my public service, which does include some years as a trial judge, as such I knew something about the deficiencies, as I saw it, of this law.

This bill really is several years late reaching this final place.

And these two Senators, as well as those who helped them, had intestinal fortitude to stay with it and they rode it through. We owe them a debt of gratitude.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I wish to thank the able Senator from Mississippi for his kind remarks. He has been a stalwart here for many years not only in defense but on crime measures and other important matters.

Mr. President, I express my appreciation to the minority leader also for cooperating in getting this bill up and for what he did to expedite it.

Mr. President, I express my appreciation to a few of the staff members who did outstanding work with some of the Senators. Mr. Vinton D. Lide, who is chief counsel of the Judiciary Committee; Paul C. Summitt, who is special counsel for criminal law on the Judiciary Committee staff; Jock Nash, chief counsel of the Criminal Law Subcommittee; Mr. Bill Miller, counsel on the Criminal Law Subcommittee with Senator LAXALT; Mr. Mike Wooten of the Judiciary Committee staff; Miss Carolyn Osolinik, with Senator KENNEDY, who worked hard on the bill; Mr. Mark Gitenstein, who is counsel to the ranking minority member on the Judiciary Committee; Miss Kathryn Zebrowski, counsel with Senator BIDEN, who worked hard on this matter; Mr. Arthur Briskman, with Senator HEFLIN, who rendered a good service, Mr. Bill Bowman, with Senator SPECTER, who was very helpful with this bill and worked with him and the committee; Steven Markman and Randy Rader, with Senator HATCH, who were very valuable staff members and have been very helpful; and Linda Nercessian and Terry Campo, with Senator GRASSLEY, who have provided excellent support and cooperation in processing this bill.

I am sure I have overlooked someone, but these are the ones who come to my attention that I certainly felt deserve to be commended for their outstanding work.

Again, I express my appreciation to the ranking minority member for his fine cooperation.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I wish to take 30 seconds to concur in all the complimentary remarks to everyone that the Senator from South Carolina made. He was a gem to work with.

I wish to say from my side of the aisle, from the standpoint of my being able to get to the point of being able to do the work, Senator KENNEDY was the guy in this thing long before I got involved. He really deserves the credit for this, not me.

I would say that Paul Summitt worked on this probably more than anyone in here except Senator KENNEDY.

I would also like to thank Chip Reid and Scott Green of my staff.

I compliment them all.

I hope that in the future we can work as we did on this on other matters and get other things done.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this is a remarkable pair, the chairman and minority member of this committee, Senators THURMOND and BIDEN. They have made a real contribution on this bill.

I also commend them for a job well done. They were extraordinary Senators and they have performed in an exemplary way.

I congratulate, as well, Senator KENNEDY and Senator LAXALT and others for their work as well.

There were moments when I thought we never would get to this point, but we did, as the Senate usually does, and I, in that respect, once again wish to thank the minority leader, without whose cooperation it would not be possible for the Senate to operate in an orderly way.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader and I wish to associate myself with his complimentary remarks and the managers of the bill and other Senators.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the principals involved in this and the sequence of legislative matters that we are still going to address have momentarily left the floor.

I may say for the benefit of those who are listening elsewhere on public address systems that I understand that the next one of the so-called crime bills will be the sentencing bill. That is one of the eight ancillary bills that was listed when we began this. I do not know of any objection to proceeding to its consideration today on this side. If we can reach that bill, I do not expect that the time for debate will be longer than 15 or 20 minutes, and I do expect a rollcall vote today.

Mr. President, I also wish to say to Senators that the Senate will be in tomorrow.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. tomorrow.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, may I ask the majority leader what time he said we would go into session tomorrow?

Mr. BAKER. At 10 a.m. is the request.

Mr. PRYOR. Does the majority leader anticipate a long session tomorrow?

Mr. BAKER. No, Mr. President, I do not.

As a matter of fact, as we did last week, I would expect we will come in fairly early, yes, at 10 a.m., and be out by about 3 p.m.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is one other matter that we may be able to take up this afternoon. It is on the Executive Calendar. It is the nomination of William H. Taft IV, of Virginia, to be Deputy Secretary of Defense.

That is cleared on this side, and I will say to the minority leader that we have no requirement for a rollcall. I believe we can do that in 5 minutes if it can be cleared on the other side.

So I will not now try to get to that, but if the minority leader is prepared to clear it yet today, I wish to do that as well.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, we are in the process on this side of clearing that nomination.

May I say also that we are in the process of clearing the sentencing bill, and I do not at the moment know of any objection to either, but if the majority leader would give us just a few minutes longer, we will probably be able to clear both.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Then, Mr. President, in order to gain time, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the majority leader withhold that request for a second?

Mr. BAKER. I withhold.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the majority leader, in response to a question from Senator PRYOR, mentioned the hour of 3 p.m.

Would the majority leader have any objection, once we have completed the business of the Senate on tomorrow, if it is no later than 3 o'clock or some such, that I take the opportunity to make one of my speeches concerning the history of the Senate?

Mr. BAKER. No, Mr. President, I would not. Indeed, I would look forward to it. It will be the first in this session in the series of presentations by the distinguished minority leader on that subject. I can assure him I welcome the chance to make such provision.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. Now, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DANFORTH). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am advised that the nomination of William H. Taft IV, of Virginia, to be Deputy Secretary of Defense has been cleared on this side and the minority leader has advised me that he is prepared to clear it on his side. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the majority leader is correct.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader. Mr. President, I know of no requirement for a rollcall vote on that nomination.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, on the assumption that we can finish the nomination in a matter of minutes, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering Calendar No. 446, the nomination of William H. Taft IV, of Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William H. Taft IV, of Virginia, to be Deputy Secretary of Defense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, all of the Members of this body are called upon to exercise our right and duty, under the Constitution, to pass judgment on individuals nominated by the President for high office in the executive branch of the Government. This important obligation must not be taken lightly, nor should such a vital decision ever be made along party lines. Reasonable men can and will disagree from time to time and that is the position I find myself in regarding the nomination of William H. Taft IV, to become Deputy Secretary of Defense.

The position of Deputy Secretary of Defense is, in my view, one of the most difficult and demanding, not to mention one of the most important, in Government. Traditionally, this post has been filled by men with extensive experience in the business world and the requisite technical background and know-how to make the difficult judgments concerning weapons systems required by the incumbent. This is not the case with this particular nomination. Mr. Taft, by training and experience, is a superb attorney and a fine, decent individual for whom I have the utmost respect and admiration as a lawyer and a man. He does not possess, however, the necessary qualifications needed to adequately carry out the duties of Deputy Secretary of Defense. We must all, in cases of this nature, vote our conscience and that is what I intend to do and have done in the Armed Services Committee by voting "No" on this nomination.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise in support of the confirmation of William Howard Taft IV, the President's nominee to the position of Deputy Secretary of Defense.

Mr. Taft is a veteran of significant responsibilities in the Federal Government.

He has served for the last 3 years as General Counsel of the Department of Defense. In that capacity, he served as a member of the Defense Resources Board and as a member of the Council on Integrity and Management Improvement.

Prior to 1977, Mr. Taft was in the Federal service for 7 years with the Federal Trade Commission, the Office of Management and Budget, and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

From 1970 to 1973, he was the principal assistant to Caspar Weinberger, serving as Deputy Director and later as Director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Mr. Taft comes from a family with a distinguished record of public service to our Nation. His great-great grandfather served as Secretary of War, his great grandfather as the 27th President of the United States, and his grandfather as a distinguished Senator from Ohio.

With such an exceptional family, Mr. Taft's dedication to public service is not surprising.

Mr. President, I believe that it is accurate to say that Mr. Taft's service has gained for him a special relationship with Mr. Weinberger. Having served in the Department of Defense, I recognize the importance of the personal and confidential relationship between the Secretary and his principal Deputy.

I believe that the special trust and confidence which Mr. Taft enjoys, combined with the experience which he brings to the position of Deputy Secretary, will allow him to build on the progress which was made under his two able predecessors, Secretary Thayer and Secretary Carlucci.

Mr. President, I strongly support Mr. Taft's confirmation and urge my colleagues to confirm him without delay.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of William H. Taft IV, of Virginia, to be Deputy Secretary of Defense?

The nomination was confirmed.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nomination was confirmed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask that the President be immediately notified that the Senate has given consent to this nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now return to legislative session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT—S. 668

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, in a moment I believe we will be ready to go on to the sentencing bill. Let me propound a unanimous-consent request to that bill which I believe has been cleared on both sides.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of the sentencing bill, Calendar Order No. 349, S. 668, that no amendment dealing with the following matters shall be in order: The death penalty, the exclusionary rule, the control of firearms, the Hobbs Act, habeas corpus, Office of the Director of National and International Drug Operations and Policy, a Select Commission on Drug Interdiction and Enforcement, the Federal Tort Claims Act, or a proposed limitation of jurisdiction of authority of the Federal Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am told that there is a possibility of clearing a very short time limitation, but very honestly it takes longer to clear the time limitation than the time they are talking about. As soon as the manager on this side is in the Chamber, I hope we can lay down the sentencing bill and dispose of it quickly by rollcall vote.

May I reiterate for those who may be listening elsewhere that a rollcall vote on this is expected.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I am glad that the majority leader has stated again that there will be a rollcall vote. He told me that earlier. I want to be certain that Senators on both sides of the aisle will be well aware of the fact that there will be a rollcall vote, as announced by the majority leader.

Even though the matter is not before the Senate, would the majority leader wish to order in a rollcall vote at this point so there will be no question about it?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order at this time to ask for the yeas and nays on passage of the sentencing bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRD. For the record and for our colleagues who, perhaps, are listening in, does the majority leader anticipate a rollcall vote tomorrow, or rollcall votes?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President, I do. I expect there will be a rollcall vote or votes tomorrow. I do not think it will be a heavy day, but I fully expect one or two votes tomorrow.

Mr. NUNN. Will the majority leader yield on that?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President, I yield.

Mr. NUNN. Does he intend to lay down or take up the habeas corpus bill this afternoon?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I may try to lay it down, but in all candor, I must say to my friend and colleague from Georgia that we have a notation on our calendar that there will be an objection to a unanimous-consent request to proceed to that matter, so it will most likely be done on a motion. Given that it may be tomorrow or Monday when we have an opportunity to have some debate on it, I would not expect to do that tonight.

Mr. NUNN. Does the majority leader have some idea about the business we shall be dealing with tomorrow? I understand there will be one or two rollcall votes. What will be the substance?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, it will be one of the remaining bills that I referred to collectively as the ancillary bills to the crime package. They are the habeas corpus reform bill, exclusionary rule reform, forfeiture of bail reform, sentencing reform, which I hope we do this afternoon, Federal tort claim reform, armed career criminal, the so-called drug czar bill, the Federal death penalty bill. What I have done so far is invite the distinguished chairman and ranking member of the Judiciary Committee to decide how they will sequence those matters.

The Senator from Georgia will recall when we got consent to go to the crime package, it was stated we would proceed to these items afterward.

Mr. NUNN. I am delighted we are, Mr. President. I want to be here particularly if the habeas corpus bill is coming up. I was supposed to be out of town but I shall cancel those plans gladly if we are going to take up those bills. If we could get some idea from the managers and the majority leader this afternoon what the substance is of the matters we shall be proceeding on tomorrow, it will be helpful.

Mr. BAKER. Maybe the Senator from Georgia and I can confer with the managers of this bill and we can get that information.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, this has been one of the priorities of this Congress, and I am delighted the majority leader is proceeding this way. I would not want to hold up any bill from coming up. I would like to see them come up and dispose of them.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is a budget waiver to accompany this bill which has been cleared for action on this side. May 1 inquire of the minority leader if he is prepared to proceed on this?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection to proceeding to the bill, therefore there should not be any objection to proceeding to the budget waiver. It is perfectly all right if the majority leader wishes to proceed.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to consideration of Calendar Order No. 421, Senate Resolution 216, the budget waiver to accompany the sentencing bill, which is S. 668.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will state the resolution by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A Senate resolution (S. Res. 216) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 668.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 216) was agreed to, as follows:

S. RES. 216

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to consideration of S. 668. Such waiver is necessary because S. 668, as reported, authorizes the enactment of new budget authority which would first become available in fiscal year 1984, and such bill was not reported on or before May 15, 1983, as required by section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 for such authorizations. Although this bill was originally introducted as separate legislation, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary felt that because S. 668 related so closely to the provisions of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act that was presented by the administration, it made sense to consider the two together. The package from the administration did not come before the committee until March 23, 1983. Due to the volume of the proposals, the committee could not hold hearings and take responsible action prior to the deadline.

The budget waiver will allow Senate consideration of S. 668 which provides for the establishment of a United States Sentencing Commission as an independent commission within the judicial branch. The Commission is to establish sentencing policies for the criminal justice system and to develop methods for measuring the effectiveness of alternate sentencing practices. The bill also raises the maximum fines which may be imposed on individuals and organizations, increases the cap on prisoner allotment payments from $100 to $500, and amends those sections of the United States Code and the Rules of Criminal Procedure dealing with the preparation of presentence reports.
